POETRY.

This Earth is not Thy Rest.

Way-are ye mourning, troubling soul,
With cares and sorrows prest;
Why turn ye not the heavenward way?
This earth is not thy rest.

The warrior, fired with martial zeal,
Stays not beside the way,
But hurries on till his bright arms
Have won for him the day.

The wanderer, though far from home,
Still cheerily presseth on,
Until he sees the taper's gleam
That tell his home is won.

And ye who know that far beyond this world
And yet so near to thee,
There is a home of rest and peace
That faith even now may see;

Why do ye mourn and weary sigh
That ye are not of fortune blest,
Arise and work for truth and right;
This earth is not thy rest.

This is a work for all to do—
A world to purge from sin—
Wayward souls to be reclaimed—
A heaven for all to win.

Then haste thee gird thy armor on,
And though with conflicts prest,
Never yield until the day is done—
This earth is not thy rest.

THE JERSEY LAWYER'S FIRST CASE IN MINNESOTA.

Did I ever tell you about the Jersey Lawyer's First Case in Minnesota?—No! Well then here goes—for it is worth circulating.

You are no doubt well aware that many sprigs of aristocracy in eastern cities, labor under the impression that in order to extinguish all other lights, they have only to emigrate to some western town and dazzle the natives. Many a man has thus started out in search of wool and been himself badly shorn.—And in no town in the world does the class stand a poorer chance than in St. Paul, Minnesota. The majority of its hardy, healthy and active inhabitants, first went to the place for health; to recruit those energies which had become exhausted in active mental labors in the east. The place commenced, in fact, as a sort of Nature's Hospital. No one thought of locating there, because he was too far out of the world. But invalids flocked in; convalescents wrote back to their families and friends; the verdict of thousands who have here been snatched as it were from their graves, was published far and wide, that pure dry air was better than drugs; and it was soon discovered by artists, speculators and capitalists, that for beauty of location and artistic building spots, the place had no rival on the globe. The result is, St. Paul has to-day a population of fifteen thousand of as active, go-ahead, sharp-jokers, financiers, and old travellers, as can be found in any city in the Union; and is doing a healthier business, and is erecting more buildings and better ones than any other three cities of its size anywhere.

So much for introductions, and a key to the fact why the mass is made up of the ablest lawyers, judges, clergy, merchants, capitalists and speculators, who overtaxed their mental energies in eastern cities.

And now to the story.

It was a pleasant morning in the month of August—(no matter what year)—while the large and splendid 'Key City,' (Captain Jones Harden and Clerk L. Eldred,) was proudly plowing her way up the Mississippi from La Crosse, that a brilliantly dressed gentleman of about 25 years of age was to be seen leisurely reclining in front of the office, puffing a 10-cent regalia, just taken from his pocket, and evidently wondering if the half civilized people of St. Paul ever smoked anything more expensive than pipes.

Turning to a plainly dressed gentleman at his side, he exclaimed:

"Are you—ah, acquainted in St. Paul?"

"O, yes; I know most of the leading citizens," was the reply.

"Do you indeed?" exclaimed the flashy gentleman. "Well, then, I am in luck—pretty lively place?"

"Quite so, sir. Every man has something to do, and all are making a good living."

"Do you live in—ah, in St. Paul?"

"I do."

"Have you any lawyers there?"

Quite too many, sir, That is my profession."

The dandy looked at the man at first with incredulity, and then with a patronizing air, he said:

"I have reference, my good fellow, to first class attornies—men of education, who have graduated at College!"

A light seemed to break in upon the man's mind as he replied:

"Ah! I see what you mean. No, we have no lawyers of education! Are you a lawyer, sir?"

Inflating himself with importance and great condescension, he replied:

"A graduate, sir, of the best college in New Jersey! And, if sufficient encouragement is held out by the members of the bar, in St. Paul, I will stop among them and give them the benefit of my knowledge."

At the same time the brilliant young sprig produced and handed over a very miniature card which read—

G——— E———L,
Newark, N. J.

The man seemed delighted. He claimed the privilege of at once extending to the stranger the hospitality of the bar of St. Paul; and declared that within two hours after the arrival of the boat, a public reception should be given him.

As the sun was sinking in the west, the "Key City" touched the levee at St. Paul, and the distinguished stranger was at once conducted to a leading hotel to await the arrival of the city bar in a body.

In about two hours they arrived, and were presented in due form, by the man who came up on the boat with the brilliant scholar, and who had introduced himself as Mr. Spotless. Then came Judge Kerby, Judge Allfish, Advocate Bloodeye, lawyers Keen, Keniffopoint, Badax Heavry, and some two dozen others—all anxious to show their respect to the lawyer who had been "educated," and a gwine for to show'm how they dew things in Jarsey.

During the excitement of shaking hands and taking drinks for the twentieth time from the row of bottles placed upon the table a long gaunt, six-and-a-half-footer came in with both boots off and without any hat, coat or vest, and in a stentorian voice exclaimed:

"Evenin' court is now open, and I'll shoot every man who don't attend in three minutes!"

There was at once a scattering from the room. Some escaped by one door and some by another: but Judge Kerby grasped the Jersey lawyer by the hand and whispered:

"Follow me and you'll be safe!"

Escaping by a back door, and threading innumerable dark lanes and cowyards, the Judge and his young friend at length reached the extensive livery stable at Allbones—the madest wag in the State.

Here they found a row of twelve barrels for the Jury to sit upon, inverted water pails for the lawyers, and a bundle of hay for the Judge. The prisoner at the bar—who was being tried for the murder of his mother with a butcher knife—was seated on a wheelbarrow, smoking an Indian pipe, and swearing that he could whip any three men on the jury.

"Good-God! gentleman!" gasped the educated man, "can it be possible that you conduct Courts in this manner in St. Paul?"

"It's only lately that we have had so nice a room as this," replied a half dozen lawyers. "We used to meet in Bloodey's wood shed—but this is extra."

The presiding Judge now called the Court to order and asked the prisoner if he had any counsel.

"Not a one!" was the loud reply; "but if that ere chap with nice clothes on will take a bolt of the job, I'll give him two cows and a hundred acres of perary."

Young Jarsey was undecided and wavering, but at length stuttered out that he wished to be excused; whereupon the prisoner sprang the length of his chain, upset the wheelbarrow, and swore if the man didn't take hold of the case, and clear him, that he would follow him from house to house and drink the last drop of his heart's blood. This decided the matter at once; and the proud sprig of aristocracy felt that his own life as well as that of his client, depended upon the amount and quality of forensic ability that he would bring to bear on the jury. On his rising to address the Court, the presiding Judge indignantly informed him that no college baby with a coat on would be permitted to speechify in that Temple.

George removed his coat, and was peremptorily ordered to remove his vest, necktie, suspenders, boots and stockings. The orders were all obeyed at the pistol's muzzle, held by the crier of the Court—a convalescent invalid, six feet two inches in his stockings, and weighing about two hundred and six pounds.

At this stage of the proceedings, two of the jury, who had been playing cards for a gallon of whiskey—got into a quarrel, one drove his bowie knife, apparently, up to the hilt in the other's body. The corpse was conveyed from the room as unconcernedly as if it had been the body of a defunct dog, and the crier screamed at the top of his voice, "Go on with the Court!"

George had been a member of the Sons of Malta, or at least he made his way into the Lodge at Trenton, a few winters ago, when Judge Naar was wont to put the candidates over the 'rugged path,' with bells on. George, we say, had been there, but now he was frightened, and made up his mind to save his precious life by flight.

With a bound that would have been creditable to the Ravels in their palmiest days, he leaped over a fanning mill, eluded the grasp of his client, who had now broken from the wheelbarrow, and by the aid of the almost impenetrable darkness succeeded in hiding himself in a lumber yard until near morning, when stealing down to the levee in his almost nude state, he ran aboard of a small steamer, and begged the clerk in the name of pity, God and humanity to give him a passage down the river to some town five hundred miles from St. Paul. He would give no explanation of his half-dressed condition, but only begged to be secreted until the boat was at least a hundred miles down the river.—On coming out of his state room the next morning—when the boat was near La Crosse—he was informed by the smiling clerk that there was a bundle of clothing and a trunk in the office for him, placed on the boat at St. Paul, with his address, by lawyer Spotless, a man of fine character, but no education.

"I thank him for my baggage!" gasped the student, turning pale at the recollection of the midnight scene in the barn; "but these Minnessota lawyers are worse than savages. They'd gamble, smoke, drink rum, and murder in the court room, and cut the throat of an educated man with as little compunction of conscience as they'd stab a toad. I've heard it said that St. Paul is a beautiful place! It may be in the day time, but it is an awful place in the night. And if it is a healthy place for invalids, it is an unhealthy one for lawyers. I'm an educated lawyer myself! I've had my first case in Minnesota, and thank God it's my last!"

On arriving at La Crosse, he went to "Brick Pomeroy," of the Democrat and tried to get him to publish the story of his St Paul experience; but "Brick" indignantly replied;

"Can't do it, my boy! 'Fraid 'taint true! it's too funny for reality, and the Democrat never deals in fiction!"

Being determined to relate his experience, however, he went and hired a hall and advertised a 'Lecture on Emigration;' and after he had received at the door nearly enough to recover his expenses, the Deputy Mayor stepped up and exclaimed:

"Have you got a license, sir, for this ere show?"

"This is not a show, and I have no license!"

"Well, I want ten dollars; and I don't care a red whether you call it a show or exhibition.

"But, my dear friend——"

"Don't but me, sir! I know what the law is! I hold office! you must pay up or mizzle!"

And so he mizzled, and when on the point of returning home to old Essex, by overland easy stages, on foot, was met by his former friend of the boat, who explained to him that the Court scene was all a joke and prevailed on him to return and locate. He dropped his airs at once and soon became a favorite.

He now holds an important office at St. Paul.

The Debt-Payer an Honorable Man.

Talking of such concerns, it is a theory of ours—based upon experience—that a man's character may be read if we ascertain how he conducts himself in reference, especially, to his little indebtednesses—leaving the larger ones to take care of themselves. In politics, Jefferson's formula is comprehensive enough—"is he honest, is he capable, is he faithful to the Constitution?"—but in private, ascertain if you can, "whether he pays his debts if he has the money," and you will perhaps know enough for your guidance. If he does not, it is certain, at least, that there is a screw loose somewhere; and it is for you to determine how far such looseness affects the whole fabric.

But if, on the contrary, a debt unpaid is a discomfort and an uneasiness, from which spontaneously he is disposed to relieve himself, fear not to place yourself in such hands. The axis of this man's revolutions is true, and it may be inferred, we think, that all the mechanism works well; for when there is a disposition to go wrong, in almost any direction, it is generally shown early in the axis aforesaid.

Have no faith in that species of goodness which is unwilling to pay its debts—"fine fellow," "good fellow," "whole-souled fellow," and that sort of thing—it is all nonsense, and worse than nonsense, leading to a belief that honesty and honor may be dispensed with, and that affection and esteem may be secured without them. Is he a "good fellow," for instance, who frolicks and enjoys himself upon money which really belongs to other people? And is that a "whole soul" which, while the washer-woman pines and suffers for want of that which is due to her, the individual with the "whole soul," goes flaunting about in gay attire, from carousal, and from one place of enjoyment to another?—Have no faith in it; and neither suffer yourself to think well of those who have fine houses, fine furniture, and parties, and are slow to pay for them, and slow likewise in paying for other things.—Depend upon it that this openheartedness, as people call it, and would have you admire, is all selfishness, narrowness and dishonor—selfishness the most intense—so intense that when its own gratification is concerned, it can deny itself nothing, no matter how duty may remonstrate. He is a much better fellow than all these, who goes threadbare and refuses indulgence until he can stand square with the world, though reckless profusion may deride him as mean; for you may rely upon it that he assumes no responsibilities except from a well-founded belief that he be able to meet them. He is the man that pays his debts, if a possibility exists of paying them; and we strongly incline to the conviction that a debt-paying man is one of the best members of society, and that he should thus be honored. Let us all, then, "pay our debts."—J. C. Neal.

A Rich Affair.

A Man Draws on a City Firm for a Wife.—A few days since a respectable business firm on Water street received a letter from a customer near Youngstown, enclosing an order for—a Wife! The customer was rich, middle aged, a Dutchman and a widower. He said he wanted a wife right off, and had no time to look up one for himself, but should be in town in the course of a day or two to marry the woman which he depended on his city friends having ready for him.—Such an order rather took the merchants aback, but the man was too good a customer to disoblige. As they had no supply of the article on hand, for sale, one of the firm went out to hunt it up, and at an Intelligence office got track of a girl who could speak German and English, was tolerably good-looking, and very much wanted to find a husband.—A bargain was struck. The Dutchman came in yesterday, found the article ready for him, approved of it, got married, and took his curious purchase home with him. We did not learn whether the firm charged a special fee, or a per centage commission on the market value of the article.—Cleveland Herald.

A Chinese Newspaper.

The Pekin, a newspaper of extraordinary size, published on silk, at Pekin, China, is said to have been started more than a thousand years ago—somewhat earlier than the one under the patronage of the "good queen Bess. In 1827 a public officer caused some false intelligence to be inserted in this newspaper, for which he was put to death. Several numbers of the paper are preserved in the public library at Paris; they are each ten and a quarter yards long!

SONG OF A BASHFUL SWAIN.

All evening Ellen had been gay,
And happy as a bird in May,
Or rabbit in October;
Her heart was light, her mirth was high,
And pleasure sparkled in her eye,
But I was dull and sober.

Her little brother she embraced,
And kissed his pouting lips with haste,
Then looked at me in wonder;
At last grown weary, up she jumped,
And thumped and banged and banged and thumped,
And raised particular thunder.

She seized me sir as I would you,
And pinched my shoulder black and blue
(My back was all a blister)
I couldn't stand it; though half dead,
I shook my fist, I shook my head,
And—by George!—I kissed her!

She threw herself into a chair—
She wrung her hands and tore her hair,
And looked as if confounded;
I sighed for home—I longed for sleep,
I could not smile—I could not weep—
I saw her pride was wounded.

I tried to speak—she hushed me quite,
"You are a coward forced to fight,
Your valor gives no pain sir;
And now, young man, I challenge you;
Though deals more daring you may do,
You can't do that again sir."

A Yankee Trick in Missouri.

The following is told of Major Hovey, of the 24th Indiana regiment, in connection with Gen. Pope's recent exploits in Missouri.

While at some point near Clinton, Major Hovey took 100 men, put them in wagons, so as to hide them from view, and then putting a few stragglers to walk, as if guarding the train, he started out. Secession shot gun in hand, hiding in the brush, saw the cortege, and supposed it a Federal wagon train poorly guarded, and hence an easy as well as legitimate prize. Reasoning thus, Secession walked from the brush presented its shot gun, and demanded a surrender—which demand was instantly met, by fifty men rising from the wagons, presenting a row of glittering muskets, and requesting a similar favor of astonished and now mortified Secession. Secession generally complied, and worked off its ill humor by cursing such mean Yankee tricks, unknown to all honorable warfare, and unworthy to all chivalrous hearts. In this way many a petulent rebel was confounded, and in two cases where fight was preferred rather than surrender two rebels sons of chivalry bit the dust, from the effect of Minnie bullets, which left canister like auger holes clear through their heads.—Major Hovey captured a large number of prisoners, and burnt one mill which was grinding for Price.

A Singular Being.

The Lewiston (Me.) Journal mentions the case of a remarkable young fellow belonging in the town of Solon, Me.—He has one of the most curiously formed heads ever known, being apparently destitute of the reasoning and moral faculties. His countenance is utterly expressionless, and yet he has a most astonishing memory. He can relate, with marvelous accuracy, all sorts of incidents of his experience, never forgets anything, and can repeat whole pages after one or two hearings. Still he is as simple as an utter fool in nearly every respect. In one, however, he exhibits better sense than many wiser heads, and that is in regard to intoxicating liquors. He declares that he knows too much to get drunk and will not touch them. He used to smoke and chew tobacco, but has given up those habits. He takes especial delight in an old watch, with wheels all out of adjustment, and deceives himself with the idea that it keeps as good time as the sun. He has travelled over half the world "on his cheek," as he terms it, and has just returned from a trip to Europe. His style is to conceal himself on board a ship or car, and afterward tell a piteous story to the captain or conductor, by which means he never fails to get put through as a "dead head." He seems to take as much interest in the simplest sports as a child. He is one of the anomalies of nature, and casts of his head have been obtained by phrenologists and others interested in craniology.

The Health Brightens Things.

God has so knit the mind and body together, that they act and react upon each other. Who has not felt that the state of health gives a coloring to everything that happens to him? One man, whose health is depressed, sees his own fireside, that used to burn so cheerily, only covered with gloom and sadness.—Another, of a bright and joyous mind, in the full vigor of health, will go forth, and the very desert to that man's eyes will rejoice, and the very wilderness to his view will blossom as the rose, and the saddest strains in nature will sound to him the most joyous and brilliant.—A sufferer goes out and looks on nature, and its roses are all become thorns, its myrtles all look like briars, and Eden itself seems to look like a desert, and the sweetest minstrelsy of the grove and the forest sounds to him like a wild and wailing miror running through all the sounds of nature.

A Good Sign

A merchant in Nashville Tenn., has sent six thousand dollars in gold to a Broadway house to pay his indebtedness to them, and the balance is to pay other creditors.—Another merchant there writes that in a week's time he is prepared to pay all his indebtedness in gold. We could give the names of parties, but for the present think it sufficient to merely note the fact.—New York Economist.

☞ A lady who has been troubled sometime with a felon on her finger, gives a simple remedy from which she experienced great relief, and which enabled her to sleep for the first time in many nights. It was to cut a hole in a lemon, and wear it on the finger like a thimble—the felon encased in the fruit. It is said to give immediate relief.

Natural Enough—When the rebels see our Foote they want to leg it.

Raising Sheep.

Sheep are fast becoming, to a certain extent, the most profitable stock a farmer can keep. With them much less labor is required to realize the same amount of money than with cows, horses, or young cattle.

The long-wooled, or mutton variety, which are, perhaps, the best adapted of any kind to our soil and climate, are very hardy and easily kept. They are not liable to disease, or, at least, have not been in this vicinity; so there is little risk to be feared in this respect.—They are evidently the kind for the times when both mutton and the coarser varieties of wool are in active demand.

There is little trouble in raising the lambs, for they are as hardy as calves, and it is nothing uncommon to see them out-number the rest of the flock—indeed, one man in this place raised eighteen from nine ewes the past season.

Lambs five or six months old are fit for market, which is not the case with other kinds of stock, hence the expense of wintering is avoided. The past few years, when beef has been dull and hardly to be disposed of, mutton has been in good demand at profitable prices.—Owing to the war this demand is steadily increasing, and in consequence there is a large call for stock sheep at high prices, in anticipation of future requirements.

How long this state of things will continue is uncertain but from present indications there will be no serious decline for a time at least. Mutton will undoubtedly be in fair demand, as there seems to be a growing inclination for this meat in preference to beef or pork, while so long as cotton goods maintain their present high prices, with an "upward tendency," there will be a favorable inducement, not to say necessity, for employing wool, so far as possible, in all fabrics for use or wear.—Plowman.

A Persian Story.

Jesus, says a Persian story arrived one evening at the gates of a certain city, and he sent his disciples forward to prepare a supper, while he himself, intent on doing good; walked through the streets into the market place. And he saw at the corner of the market some people gathered together looking at an object on the ground, and he drew near to see what it might be. It was a dead dog, with a halter round his neck, by which he appeared to have been dragged through the dirt, and a mire, a more abject, a more unclean thing never met the eye of man. And those who stood by looking on with abhorrence.—'Faugh!' said one, stopping his nose, he 'pollutes the air.' 'How long shall the foul beast offend our sight?' said another. "Look at his torn hide,' said a third one could not even cut a shoe out of it.' 'And his ears,' said a fourth, 'all dragged and bleeding.' 'No doubt' said a fifth, 'he hath been hanged for stealing.' And Jesus heard them, and looking down on the dead creature he said: 'Pearls are not equal to the whiteness of his teeth.' Then the people turned toward him with amazement, and said among themselves. 'Who is this?' This must be Jesus of Nazareth; for only he could find something to pity and approve, even in a dog; and, being ashamed, they bowed their heads before him and went each his way.

Taxation in France.

The ingenuity of France in finding subjects for taxation, is recommended to us for imitation. It is proposed to levy, in Paris, an annual tax upon carriages of four wheels, thirty francs, and twenty-five francs upon each saddle and carriage horse; and in the country this tax is to be reduced to forty, twenty-five and twenty. It is said there are 12,000 carriages in Paris, and that through the country, the estimate which M. Fould makes of the result of this impost of 5,500,000 frances would be surpassed.—Dogs are taxed now at the rate of ten frances per annum, and it is said also to be the intention of the government to levy a tax upon cats. Among other projects of increasing the revenue is said to be one for a tax of a centime a hundred upon matches, which it is estimated would yield half a million of dollars a year.

Jack's Idea of a Locomotive:

"Why says he, "there's nothing manly about it. Watch a ship, now, with her canvass bellying out, laying down to it just enough to show how she feels the breeze, tossing the spray from her bows, and lifting her head over the seas, as if she swept over 'em—there's something like life there. There's something noble about a horse; he steps as if he knew he was going, and proud of his duty, and able to do it. But lubber—bah! That there concern comes insinuating, sneaking along, crawling on his belly like a thundering long snake with a pipe in his mouth."

☞ A story is told of a Nashville lady: Her relative, an officer in the Federal army, called to see her. She showed her patriotism by the bitterest remarks toward the Lincolnites. Nothing could reconcile her to the Union or appease her temper. "Oh, come, you mustn't talk so," said the officer; "you must be a Unionist now; sooner or later you will be one." "Well," said she, "it will not be for a while, anyhow—It took me six months to turn Secesh, and I will not turn Union in less time. I'm not afraid of you; I'll not talk Unjust because you are here."

☞ If you wish to ascertain the temper of a young lady, look at her nails and the tips of her gloves. If they are jagged and much bitten, you may be sure she is peevish, irritable, quarrelsome, and too ready to show her teeth at the smallest provocation. This is an infallible test that every ill-tempered young lady carries at her finger's ends. Do not attempt to kiss such a young lady under the mistletoe.

BALTIMORE LOCK HOSPITAL ESTABLISHED AS A REFUGE FROM QUACKERY.

The Only Place Where a Cure Can be Obtained.

DR JOHNSTON has discovered the most Certain, Speedy and only Effectual Remedy in the World for Weakness of the Back or Limbs, Strictures, Affections of the Kidneys and Bladder, Involuntary Discharges, Impotency, General Debility, Nervousness, Dyspepsy, Langour, Low Spirits, Confusion of Ideas, Palpitation of the Heart, Timidity, Tremblings, Dimness of Sight or Giddiness, Disease of the Head, Throat, Nose or Skin, Affections of the Lungs, Stomach or Bowels—those Terrible Disorders arising from the Solitary Habits of Youth—those SECRET and solitary practices more fatal to their victims than the song of Syrens to the Mariners of Ulysses, blighting their most brilliant hopes or anticipations, rendering marriage, &c., impossible.

There is little trouble in raising the lambs, for they are as hardy as calves, and it is nothing uncommon to see them out-number the rest of the flock—indeed, one man in this place raised eighteen from nine ewes the past season.

YOUNG MEN

Especially, who have become the victims of Solitary Vice, that dreadful and destructive habit which annually sweeps to an untimely grave thousands of Young Men of the most exalted talents and brilliant intellect, who might otherwise have entranced listening Senates with the thunders of eloquence, or waked to ecstacy the living lyre, may call upon me with full confidence.

MARRIAGE.

Married Persons, or Young Men contemplating marriage, being aware of Physical weakness, organic debility, deformities, &c., specially cured.

He who places himself under the care of Dr. J. may religiously confide in his honor as a gentleman, and confidently rely upon his skill as a Physician.

ORGANIC WEAKNESS

Immediately Cured and Full Vigor Restored.

This Dreadful Disease—which renders Life miserable and Marriage impossible—is the penalty paid by the victims of improper indulgences. Young persons are too apt to commit excesses from not being aware of the dreadful consequence that may ensue.—Now, we feel that understanding the subject will pretend to deny that the power of procreation is lost sooner by those falling into improper habits than by the prudent! Besides being deprived the pleasure of healthy offspring, the most serious and destructive symptoms to both body and mind arise. The system becomes Deranged, the Physical and Mental Functions Weakened, Loss of Sexual Secretive Power, Nervous, Irritability, Dyspepsia, Palpitation of the heart, Indigestion, Constitutional Debility, a Wasting of the Frame Coughs, Consumption, &c.

A CURE WARRANTED IN TWO DAYS.

No Mercury or Nauseous Drugs.

DR. JOHNSTON,

Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, London. Graduate from one of the most eminent Colleges in the United States, and the greater part of his life has been spent in the hospitals of London, Paris, Philadelphia and elsewhere, has effected some of the most astonishing cures that were ever known; many troubled with ringing in the head and ears when asleep, great nervousness being alarmed at sudden sounds, bashfulness, with frequent blushing, attended sometimes with a derangement of mind, were cured immediately.

TAKE PARTICULAR NOTICE!

Dr. J. addresses all those who have injured themselves by improper indulgences and solitary habits, which ruin both body and mind, unfitting them for either business, study, society or marriage.

These are some of the sad and melancholy effects produced by early habits of youth, viz: Weakness of the Back and Limbs, Pains in the Head, Dimness of Sight, Loss of Muscular Power, Palpitation of the Heart, Dyspepsy, Nervous Irritability, Derangement of the Digestive Functions, General Debility, Symptoms of Consumption.

MENTALLY—The fearful effects on the mind are much to be dreaded—Loss of Memory, Confusion of Ideas, Depression of Spirits, Evil Forebodings, Aversion to Society, Self-Distrust, Love of Solitude, Timidity, &c., are some of the evils produced.

THOUSANDS of persons of all ages can now judge what is the cause of their declining health, losing their vigor, becoming weak, pale, nervous and emaciated, having a singular appearance about the eyes, cough and symptoms of consumption.

DR. JOHNSTON'S INVIGORATING REMEDY FOR ORGANIC WEAKNESS.

By this great and important remedy.—Weakness of the Organs is speedily cured, and full vigor restored.

Thousands of the most nervous and debilitated, who had lost all hope, have been immediately relieved. All impediments to Marriage, Physical or Mental Disqualification, Nervous Irritability, Trembling, Weakness or Exhaustion of the most fearful kind, speedily cured by Dr. Johnston.

YOUNG MEN

Who have injured themselves by a certain practice indulged in when alone—a habit frequently learned from evil companions, or at school, the effects of which are nightly felt, even when asleep, and if not cured, renders marriage impossible, and destroys both mind and body, should apply immediately.

What a pity that a young man, the hope of his country, the darling of his parents, should be snatched from all prospects and enjoyments of life, by the consequence of deviating from the path of nature and indulging in a certain secret habit. Such persons never before contemplating reflect that a sound mind and body are the most necessary requisition to promote connubial happiness. Indeed, without these, the journey through life become a weary pilgrimage; the prospect hourly darkens to the view; the mind becomes shadowed with despair and filled with the melancholly reflection that the happiness of another becomes blighted with our own.

DISEASE OF IMPRUDENCE

When the misguided and imprudent votary of pleasure finds he has imbibed the seeds of this painful disease, it too often happens that an ill-timed sense of shame, or dread of discovery, deters him from applying to those who, from education and respectability can alone befriend him. He falls into the hands of ignorant and designing pretenders, who, incapable of curing, fleck his pecuniary substance, keep him trifling month after month, or as long as the smallest fee can be obtained, and in spite of leave him with ruined health to sigh over his galling disappointment; or, by the use of that deadly poison, Mercury, hasten the constitutional system of this terrible disease, such as affection of the Head, Throat, Nose, Skin, etc., progressing with frightful rapidity till death puts a period to his dreadful sufferings by sending him to that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveller returns.

TO STRANGERS.

There are so many unlearned and worthless Pretenders Advertising themselves as Physicians, trifling with and ruining the Health of the already afflicted, that Dr. Johnston deems it necessary to say to those unacquainted with his reputation that his Credentials or Diplomas always hang in his Office.

The Remedies and Treatment of Dr. Johnston are unknown to all others, prepared from a life spent in the great Hospitals of Europe, the first in this Country, and a more extensive private practice than any other Physician in the world.

ENDORSEMENT OF THE PRESS

The many thousands cured at this institution within the last eighteen years, and the numerous important Surgical Operations performed by Dr. Johnston, witnessed by the reporters of the "Sun" and many other papers, notices of which have appeared again and again before the public, besides his standing as a gentleman of character and responsibility, is a sufficient guarantee to the afflicted.

Skin Diseases Speedily Cured.

Persons writing should send that portion of the Advertisement which describes Symptoms; also, be particular to enclose a Postage Stamp to be used on the reply and direct in the following manner: Dr. J. M. JOHNSTON, of the Baltimore Lock Hospital, Baltimore, Maryland. May 17—y.

It forms a flat, even, and elastic seam, which is WARRANTED not to rip in wear, even if the seam is cut at frequent intervals, and securing any complaint, which was pronounced incipient Consumption by Physicians who I had employed to attend me. After consultation with your father, he gave me the Balsam, Pectoral, and Wild Cherry Pectoral, and in an incredibly short time I was completely restored to health, and retain it to this day.

Truly, Yours, J. P. COOLBAUGH.

[Extract of a Letter, dated.]

ELDORADO, Preble Co., Ohio, Nov. 1st, 1859.

Dr. Markley—Dear Sir:—You enclose me another supply of your Medicines. They have given great satisfaction in this neighborhood. The Balsam particularly extolled as excellent, and if their sale be properly attended to, there will be a still greater demand for them. Respectfully, yours,

A. STERLING.

[Extract of a Letter of Mrs. Watson, dated.]

CHANDLERSVILLE, Chester Co., Jan. 25, 1861.

Dr. Markley:—Please send me a larger supply of your medicines than you did last. I have sold more in the last three months than I ever did in the same time before. Yours, with respect,

REBECCA J. WATSON.

The Balsam, and all of Dr. G. B. Markley's Medicines are manufactured only by Dr. G. H. Markley, Lancaster, Pa., who can be consulted by letter.
