Interesting Letter From California.

The editor of the SENTINEL is in receipt of a very interesting letter from Mr. N. H. Baile, cashier of the First National Bank of New Windsor, who has been attending the convention of the National Association of the Bankers of the United States, at San Francisco, Cal., and who, accompanied by Mrs. Baile, is visiting prominent localities in the Pacific Coast States. The letter is written in Mr. Baile's pleasant, graphic style and we take the liberty of sharing it, or extracts from it, with the many friends of its author in this county. It is as follows:

Hotel Del Monte, Del Monte, Cal.,
October 24, 1903, 11.48 P. M.

Here we are at a perfect paradise, having arrived at 12 M. We lunched and then visited the old capital of California, Monterey, with its many old buildings and places of interest. I think this is the most delightful spot I ever saw, and the best of it is, we have been entertained during the day and tonight by the San Francisco bankers—gratis. I don't know whether they thought we were short in cash, and wanted us to see this lovely resort or not—at any rate they paid our R. R. fare, 120 miles and return to San Francisco, and rooms and a day free. The manager of the hotel, Mr. Reynolds, is a Maylander—having been born in that good old State—and was delighted when I made known my residence. The grounds of the hotel contain 123 acres and the hotel building covers seven acres. There are about one thousand guests here tonight and everything is quite up to date. The dining room is beyond description and everything in perfect keeping. Our trip today was through orchards—thousands of trees—apple, peach, orange and fig, and gardening to beat anything we ever beheld. Nothing can be grown without water, and along the line of R. R. wind wheels are used to pump the water for irrigation. We saw hundreds—and the strange thing is, none of them are over 25 feet from the ground. We saw hundreds of acres in celery alone, and hundreds, yes, thousands in grapes, and I tell you right here, grapes are the only fruit that tastes good. The apples taste just like chips (if you ever ate chips,) but the grapes are all right, "sure enough." Another thing took my eye, i. e., the horses. I think Senator Stanford not only deserves the thanks of the Pacific Coast for the magnificent University, but for the beautiful horses. I fear I will never be satisfied with a Maryland horse after seeing those of California. I saw a pair this morning that I think I would have been foolish enough to have given a year's salary for, but the salary would only have bought one-half of one horse.

This is a wonderful country—all sand and bare hills, except where they irrigate, and then it is the greatest producing region in the U. S. The wheat straw is as white as a new straw hat—no rain to bleach it. Tomorrow we go to Los Angeles, where the bankers say they will show San Francisco bankers how to entertain visitors, and they will have a goodly number to look after. They have even promised to furnish cash to all who are "gone broke," to save them walking home, for it is a long way.

Mrs. Baile enjoys every minute of the time and don't miss anything that comes her way. We only wish we had all our friends with us.

* * * * * *

The weather has been perfect, and the manager here told me they had not had rain since April 27th.

Mr. Lamotte, formerly of Finksburg, saw our names in the San Francisco paper and came 192 miles to see somebody from Carroll county. He is well and doing well. It is now 12.20 (past midnight) and is Sunday morning. This means three o'clock A. M. in Carroll county, Md., as we turned our watches back three times (an hour each) since leaving home. We have seen a whole lot of things of which we hope to tell you when we return home. Yours,

NACE.

LETTER TO WESTMINSTER HDW. CO.
Westminster, Md.

Dear Sirs: Do you want to sell Devoe lead-and-zinc for your town and country?

The whole doctrine of it turns on these three points:

(1) It is all paint and true paint;
(2) It is the stronest paint;
(3) It is full measure.

Because it is all paint, true paint proportioned for strength and full-measure,

(1) It takes least for a job;
(2) Looks best all the time;
(3) Lasts longest;
(4) Gathers the trade, and holds customers.

There is no such argument for any other paint; there is no other such paint; there is nothing but talk for any other paint. Devoe is the paint, if you want the facts on your side.

The country is full of experiences; we bring these experiences to bear on your trade, if you sell Devoe.

Yourstruly,
F. W. DEVOE & CO.
NEW YORK.

ESTHER.

—:o:—

An old man sitting beneath a vine-covered porch slowly took his pipe from his mouth, and watched the smoke as it drifted away in the warm summer breeze.

"Mother," he said to the silver-haired woman who sat by his side sewing, how long is it since Esther left?"

"Seven months the sixteenth of this month," she answered a little sadly.

The old man took a long puff.

"It seems seven years," he said slowly. Neither of them spoke again for a long while, for their thoughts had traveled far away across the ocean, to a distant New England city.

* * * *

It was cold, very cold, in that distant city, and in perhaps its coldest corner stood a gray, granite building. It mattered little to the merciless north wind that within these walls lay the sick and dying, for it howled and stormed around the structure its very worst in anger at being baffled by the massive stones. In a distant corner of the hospital, where the wind had tempered its angry howl to a mournful dirge, was situated a small, very clean room. In this room was a small white bed, and on the bed a very weak, dark-eyed girl.

Had it not been for her labored breathing, one might have thought her asleep. Occasionally a white-aproned nurse stole softly in, and, feeling the rapid pulse for a minute, marked it on the chart over the bed, and stole softly out again.

Then a group of doctors appeared at the door. The gray-haired man who led them glanced at the chart, stood for a few moments with his hand on his chin, and then said slowly:

"She will not live until to-morrow morning."

Three of the four young men with him nodded their heads in silence, the fourth drew in a quick breath and pressed his lips tightly together. It was a way Dr. Morse had when his mind was made up. As they filed out, the figure on the bed heard the gray-haired doctor's voice: "You see, in these cases the trouble lies in the fact that the patient uses up all his strength in conquering the disease. Now, I remember a case——" His voice died away as the group turned a corner in the long corridor.

Yes, she was conscious, although no one suspected it, not even the nurse. She was too weak to move, but her mind seemed to have become very clear during the last few hours. What she had heard did not disturb her in the least. She was not even surprised, for she herself had realized it for some time. Then, you see, she did not care, for she was so weary, so very tired. It would seem good to rest. All she would have to do would be to close her eyes, go to sleep and rest.

All day long she argued with herself the question of life and death, gradually growing weaker as night approached. The dim light of the winter's day slowly faded away, and left the black darkness of a winter's night. The wind died down with the setting sun, and the cold, dark building was left in peace. The weak form on the small white bed within moved not, but still awake.

During the day Dr. Morse came in several times to look at her. He had taken a strange interest in this frail nurse, so far from home, and she, in response to his strong nature, had told him about her home life, and confided her struggles to him. Her life in the hospital had been one long struggle. The many disagreeable duties that fall to a nurse had been doubly repulsive to this girl who came from her quiet, secluded home life. She had fought bravely, and had overcome them one by one, but it had taken all her strength and she felt tired.

Her confidences and girlish reliance upon Dr. Morse might have proved dangerous with any other doctor, but Morse was different from the majority. He was one of the few men who become so engrossed in their profession that it is food and drink to them, sleep and rest, work and pleasure. He was young, yet the result of his hard work already showed on his face. Tall, well-built, with shaggy brows overhanging two bright, deep set eyes, he impressed everybody as a man out of the ordinary. Furthermore, he had not allowed his work to absorb the finer feelings, as so often happens.

He understood the young girl perfectly. He knew that the chances were that she would give up the battle with death from sheer weariness. He resolved that he would help her fight. This was what the quick drawn breath and firmly pressed lips meant, when the gray-haired doctor spoke.

When at last he had finished his day's work, Dr. Morse went at once to Esther's room, leaving orders that he was not to be disturbed until morning. He had made up his mind how he should fight, for he had divined that she was conscious. It was nearly eleven o'clock when he entered and took a chair by her bedside. For a few minutes he bent over her, looking straight into her face. Suddenly he
