SATURDAY.....JUNE 28, 1890.

From the Bench to a Drunkard's Grave.

November 20, as the solemn pall of evening was gathering around the great city of Chicago, an old man, clad in little else than rags, and tottering with the infirmities of age, entered one of the many drinking houses on South Desplaines street, at the corner of School. He entered by the side door, very quietly, with the evident intention of being left unnoticed. And so it was. The bar-tender hardly glanced up from his seat behind the counter, and the old man dropped into a chair near the battered stove in the corner. He sat quite still for several minutes, with his head inclined forward, chin resting upon his breast. Then his hands dopped listlessly to his sides, the muscles of his limbs relaxed, his body slipped downward to one side, fell in a rude, limp heap to the floor, and William W. Drummond, who once wore the judicial ermine of the United States, and was recognized as one of the eminent jurists of his time, was dead—dead in a barrel house, the resort of the lowest of the low characters of a great city; dead among people with whom he had lived for years—yet he had once been a Chief Justice for the United States. In 1853, when a young man of eminent abilities and a promising future, he was appointed Chief Justice of Utah by President Pierce. After his appointment, though he had an elegant family consisting of his wife, four daughters and one son, he fell into the hands of a dissolute woman, who dragged him down to ruin. He abandoned his family, and after two years in Utah he resigned, returned to Chicago to practice law. But his reputation was blasted, and drink became the foe which finished what the woman had begun. For eight years he had eked out a miserable existence by various disgraceful practices, lived in cheap boarding houses, sometimes begging from house to house, and finally died in one of the lowest resorts on Desplaines street. Oh, what sin leads men to!

WOMEN AT THE DENTIST'S.—The Chicago Tribune quotes a leading dentist of that city as saying: Women have most of their dentistry done before marriage. Men do not give them the credit they deserve in this. If women were as selfish as they are charged they would wait until they were married and have the husbands pay the bills. When a young woman comes in here I know she is going to marry. I have seldom failed in my guess. A young beauty was here the other day who was a $75 customer. I knew her well, and when the work was over I asked:

"When is the wedding to take place?"

She blushed and replied: "Who told you anything about it?"

The older people become the more they dread dentistry. I don't know that this is strange. Children have a dread of having teeth extracted, but when it comes to filling I had rather have a child than any one else. They seldom flinch under the operation. On the other hand I have known men who stood up before cannon during the war, and who never quailed, who turned pale when they entered a dentistry.

The Latest Hold-Up.

The two men who had been sitting together in the seat near the door of the car became engaged in animated controversy, and their loud voices attracted the attention of all the other passengers. Suddenly one of them rose up and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, I appeal to you to decide a disputed point. My friend here insists that not more than three persons out of five believe they have souls. I take a more cheerful view of humanity. Will all of you who believe you have souls raise your right hands?"

Every right hand in the car went up.

"Thank you," he said, with a smile. "Keep them up for just a moment. Now will all of you who believe in a hereafter please raise your left hand also?"

Every left hand in the car went up.

"Thank you, again," he said. "Now while all of you have your hands raised, my friend here will go down the aisle and relieve you of whatever valuables you may happen to have. Lively, now, Jim."

Her Beauty was Not Spoiled.

A pretty story is told of the late Dr. Ulysses Trelat, who died recently in Paris. At the hospital which he attended a beautiful girl, suffering from cancer on the face, was brought to be operated on. "Doctor," said the patient, "if you cut off my nose I shall be ugly all my life." "Don't worry about that, my dear," he replied; "I will see that it is all right." The girl was then chloroformed and had her nose removed, but before that was done a cast was made of the feature and a false nose in enamel constructed, which was placed over her face when the bandages where removed. The patient recovered and preserved her beauty, and no one except herself and the good doctor was ever aware of the fact.

Educational Notes.

Physical development requires food, air, light, sleep, exercise and rest.

Thought is limited by the action of the representative powers of the mind.

Original perception through different senses precedes acquired perception.

The means of producing mental action are determined by the nature of the mind.

The limit to education is determined by the nature of the being to be educated.

The passive or receptive imaginational is developed earlier than the constructive.

The stimulation of the representative faculties depends upon the association of ideas.

Sent Out the Wrong Speech.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

Congressman Stockbridge, of Maryland, was so impressed with the tariff speech of Congressman Gear, of Iowa, that he left at the Government Printing office an order for 10,000 copies and the names of his constituents, with franked wrappers enough to go round. By some mistake the speech of Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, on the other side of the question, got into the wrappers. Mr. Stockbridge's feelings may be faintly imagined.

THE Crisfield, (Md.) Leader says that a Prohibition church will be erected in that town and $600 has already been subscribed. The minister will preach in favor of the prohibition party from the pulpit, advocate the party on the stump, manage prohibition conventions and primary meetings, and admit none to church membership except those who truly repent of affiliating with the other parties in the past, and promise to henceforth and forever vote the Prohibition ticket.

A MAN in New York wishes to know whether he may marry on $500 a year. Certainly he may—if the girl has money.

I am satisfied that Cancer is hereditary in my family. My father died of it, a sister of my mother died of it, and my own sister died of it. My feelings may be imagined, then, when the horrible disease made its appearance on my side. It was a malignant Cancer, eating inwardly in such a way that it could not be cut out. Numerous remedies were used for it, but the Cancer grew steadily worse, until it seemed that I was doomed to follow the others of the family. I took Swift's Specific, which, from the first day, forced out the poison, and continued its use until I had taken several bottles, when I found myself well. I know that S. S. S. cured me.
