WESTMINSTER, MARYLAND.

Entered at the Postoffice at Westminster, Md., as Second-class matter.

SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1888.

Chauncey M. Depew is said to have in preparation a letter declaring that he is not a candidate for the presidential nomination.

The Iowa Republican Convention elected a delegation to the National Convention in favor of Senator Allison for the presidency.

The Republican Convention at Springfield chose two Sherman men as national delegates, but rejected the Senator's personal choice.

The latest arrangement proposes to make Secretary Bayard chief justice and promote Minister Phelps to his place in the State Department.

According to a Tammany sachem, prominent Republicans in New York are favoring a ticket to embrace Ben Harrison and Levi P. Morton.

Ex-Postmaster-General Frank Hatton said he regarded the Republican candidates to be in this order: Sherman, Depew, Harrison, Gresham, Lincoln and Allison.

When Grover Cleveland entered the White House the Mugwumps assured the country that he was immensely better than his party, and could be counted upon to raise it slowly but surely up to his own superior ethical level. Ask them to-day what progress President Cleveland has made in his missionary work, and they remark that—let's see, Mr. Curtis, what was it you were just saying in regard to the relation of this Administration to Civil Service reform?

"The candidate of the Republican party this year will undoubtedly be Senator William B. Allison, of Iowa. He is undoubtedly the strongest man we can nominate. He has the confidence of all classes. He is not identified with any of the factional disputes. He is gaining strength every day." Such was the language of Representative Payson, of Illinois, when asked who he thought would be the Republican nominee for President this year.

ALABAMA,

TENNESSEE.

How is that for a Democratic pyramid? Pretty solid Democratic states, every one of them, aren't they? Every one of them has been victimized and robbed by dishonest Democratic state officials within the past ten years. This year they are expected to boom for Cleveland and reform as usual.

Revised returns of Tuesday's election in Chicago show that in the aldermanic contests the republicans elected 19 and the democrats 11 members of the city council. This leaves the party representation in the new council 32 republicans, 15 democrats and 1 socialist. This is a gain for the republicans. In Galesburg two of the striking engineers of the Burlington Road were elected aldermen, and the ticket favored by the strikers was generally successful.

The president of the National League of Republican Clubs has returned from his extensive tour in the West, and reports that the movement is everywhere making most satisfactory progress. Mr. Foster's opportunities for observation were unrivalled. In all the States that he visited he found the same hopeful condition of things. When the League was organized it was predicted that within six months 4,000 clubs would be in full working order. Mr. Foster makes the gratifying statement that long before six months have expired a still larger number will have been organized. The wisdom of the originators of this method of arousing Republican interest and spreading Republican principles has been amply justified.

The Rhode Island Election.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 5.—Full returns of yesterday's election show that Royal C. Taft (Rep.) has a majority of 1,934, and Enos Lapham (Rep.) for lieutenant governor has a majority of 1,755. The suffrage amendment had 573 over the necessary three-fifths vote. The Senate stands: Republicans, 25; Democrats 6; no election, 5. House—Republicans, 54; Democrats, 10; Prohibition, 1; no election, 7.

Republican State Central Committee.

The Republican State Central Committee has been called to meet in Baltimore April 11th, at 12 o'clock, in Dushane Post Hall, corner of Lexington and St. Paul streets. The committee will name dates for the meeting of the different Congressional coventions to nominate candidates for Congress and also set a time for the holding of a State convention to name electors and delegates at large to the Chicago convention.

Legislature Adjourned.

The Legislature on Monday night adjourned and thoughtful people will inquire what has it done? A number of local bills have been passed, but would the communities for whose benefit they are intended have suffered in any way if they had not been passed? The bills that are left stranded on the calendar are quite as important as many that got through, yet nobody will suffer by the failure of the two Houses to finish their work. What law of general ability has been put upon the statute books? What great public interest has been promoted?

WAR REMINISCENCE.

Battle of Welden R. R., August 18, 19 and 21, 1864, as Seen by a Participant.

On the 16th of August, 1864, our corps (the 5th) commanded by Major-General G. K. Warren, was relieved from the works in front of Petersburg, marching to the rear about a mile, encamped in the woods near the railroad, preparatory for a move, as we supposed, in what direction we of the ranks could only conjecture. On the morning of the 18th, about 2 or 3 o'clock, we were awakened by the too familiar command to fall in. The head of column filed to our left and then we were made aware of our destination—the Welden R. R. As soon as we heard railroad, we braced ourselves for hot work. We well knew the Johnnies would not give up such an important road as the Welden without a severe struggle. On our arrival at the Railroad our regiment (the 4th Maryland) was deployed as skirmishers, commanded by Major Harrison Adreon. We advanced through a strip of wood into an opening of several hundred yards. In our immediate front was a field of corn. After being halted about midway between the wood and cornfield, we threw up small skirmish pits. At the completion of these pits the writer asked permission to visit the cornfield, in company with James Geogan, with a view of obtaining roasting ears, which was granted. We got to the field all right and plucked about a dozen ears apiece, when "bang! zip! bang! zip!" Of course we did not stop to inquire into or censure them for their impudence. Our consoling thought was that we were not stealing—we only wanted a few ears for supper and did not think the proprietor was at home. Jim, being an Irishman, exclaimed, "Holy Moses! who the devil is that?" and before you could bat your eyes he and your humble servant leaped an eight-rail fence and scampered for the pits minus the roasting ears, much to the amusement of the other boys. The rebs following after in hot pursuit drove in our skirmish lines.

Our division (Ayers') was formed on the left. The rebels assailed our extreme left and threw it into confusion, but it was speedily rallied, and by free use of musketry and artillery the rebel onset was checked. In this engagement of the evening of the 18th we lost about one thousand in killed, wounded and prisoners. On the afternoon of the 19th the fighting began on the right, Crawford's division, carrying his skirmishers and parts of his rear line of battle. The consequence was Crawford's lines had to fall back with part of Ayers' left, our brigade (the Maryland) being on Ayers' left. At this moment the confederates made a furious attack on Ayers, but Warren was there, as usual, and brought up all the receded lines and regained the ground temporarily lost. The rebs were driven inside their entrenchments. The loss in this engagement was very heavy, estimated at several thousand, mostly prisoners. The rebs lost a great many in killed and wounded. The fighting was of short duration, but close and determined.

On the 20th very little fighting took place. When night came we fell back about a mile out of the wood to near the yellow house on the railroad and entrenched. Here an attack on Warren's position was made on the 21st, in the morning. It opened with artillery all along our front, followed by an assault, which was everywhere repulsed. Our loss, by reason of fighting behind entrenchments, was but a few hundred. The enemy left several hundred dead on the field. We also captured over five hundred men, nearly a whole brigade, and six flags in this engagement. Gen. Dushane, commander of the Maryland brigade, was killed. The last assault, however, was a most gallant one, and the great openings made in the ranks were closed up with steadiness and a noble devotion, and they pressed forward till they reached a ravine, where they halted and many surrendered. Our boys had been compelled again and again to attack the enemy behind their breastworks, and been repulsed, but now they had their revenge and hurled back such as did not surrender with terrible slaughter. At this engagement Captain A. C. Williams, of the writer's company, was wounded, your humble servant at that time acting as first duty sergeant The orderly sergeant was wounded on the 18th, Lieut. Gorsuch was killed at Wilderness, and Lieut. Remby at Spottsylvania. After the captain was wounded he informed me that I was in command of the company until further orders. I felt myself as big as Alexander the Great, and, leaping over the breastwork, demanded of a rebel captain his sword, which he refused to surrender, saying, "you are not a commissioned officer." The estimation of myself at once sank into insignificance. About 2 o'clock of the same day our regiment (the 4th Maryland) was ordered on skirmish line, where, at about 3 o'clock, the writer was severely wounded by a sharpshooter. This ended my connection with the army, being discharged the following winter on account of disability.

P. S.—This is what I saw. What the other divisions of the corps did I will not say, for I could only see what transpired around me. That all did equally well is not to be doubted, under such leaders as Griffin, Cuttler and Crawford.

By the action of the Legislature there will be no more October elections in Baltimore city.

John P. Poe expects to have the new General Code, with all the laws enacted by the present General Assembly, ready for delivery by July 1st.

Carrie S. Black, of Indiana, widow of Barker Black, has sued the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad for $30,000 damages for the death of her husband, who was a conductor.

The bill for a constitutional amendment giving the Governor power to veto separate items of the appropriation bills finally passed the Legislature Monday night, and the amendment will be voted upon by the people at the next election.

On Saturday the $1.25 gas bill for Baltimore was stolen from the Senate files, but a new bill was passed under suspension of the rules and signed by the Governor before midnight. Bills were passed by both houses to reduce State taxes 1½ cents, making the school tax 10½ cents, and authorizing a commission to report on prison contract labor.

Reminiscences of Old Taneytown.

Changes in the old town—George Miller—Patrick Burke—Father Shockey—Daniel Snovell—Thos. Rudisell, &c.

Taneytown Correspondent of the SENTINEL.

BLUE LICK SPRINGS, KY., April 2nd, 1888.—My Young Friend:—You say I would see many changes were I to visit the old town now. There is no doubt of that, for in the length of time I have been away from there a new generation of people have grown up, and the improvements must no doubt have kept pace with the new people. It is only here and there that my eyes would see a familiar land-mark, and very few would be the greetings from old-time friends and associates. An old-time intimate friend informs me, among other items of news, of the enlargement to three times its dimensions when I knew it, of the Reformed church burying-ground. A walk through it, and a view of the many mounds raised there since then, would tell me in words plainer than any the tongue could give utterance to where the greater number of the friends and companions of my youth had gone.

This place is quite a resort during the summer season, for the would-be fashionables of Louisville and other Kentucky cities, who are not possessed of quite means sufficient to indulge in a trip to Europe, or a summer cottage at Long Branch. It answers all the purposes, you know, if their friends at home can only be kept in ignorance of where they are spending the season. This is not the reason of my being here, however; I just dropped down here to take a few observations of the country and to write you this letter. There is a fine hotel here, being refitted and enlarged for the coming season.

Well up on Emmitsburg street, opposite the town "Commons," in rather an isolated house, lived my old friend George Miller. He was drummer for the military company, and his services were indispensable at all fourth of July celebrations and grand public parades, and I must say for him, that his drumming and John Stauffer's fifing, always warmed the patriotism in my young breast, and, in fact, every boy that heard them to such a pitch, that every mother's son of us was willing and anxious to hurry off to Mexico and help whip the "Greasers." There were very few persons at that day, or this either as to that, who could excel George on the snare drum. It was quite amusing to see with what vigor he handled the sticks once upon a time when a would-be champion drummer came up from Littlestown to astonish the natives, and show George how to play. He was so completely vanquished by George that he was never seen in the town again. He died in obscurity.

On the same street, a little further west, in an humble cottage, lived Patrick Burke. Pat was a son of the "auld sod," as was evident from the richness of his brogue. He was the settler of all disputes and arguments among his fellow country-men, being high authority on all questions pertaining to his native land. Pat was a loyal citizen of his adopted country, a "dyed-in-the-wool democrat," as most of his nationality are. Having been a participant in the revolution of '98 in Ireland, his love for Johnny Bull you may imagine was very meagre. He had several sons, but I don't think either of them ever distinguished himself in after life, except to help swell the receipts at the stone tavern. I don't say this through any disrespect to their memory, as they were kind-hearted, good-dispositioned young men, and may have become prominent in other fields of usefulness in after life.

Down on York street, near the Catholic church, lived Father Shockey, who ministered to the spiritual wants of his flock in the early "thirties." He died many years ago and lies buried near the entrance to the church in which he so long loved to officiate.

Near there lived Dan Snovell, a prominent character in that day. My best recollection of him is as an assistant to Father Shockey in his office as priest, and a leader in the choir. He was a harness-maker and carried his business to a successful end.

Just below the Catholic church lived Thomas Rudisell. He conducted a large tannery, and also owned a fine farm in the suburbs. He was a fine business man, quiet and unassuming in his manners, and accumulated quite a fortune from his business. His establishment afforded a fine market for hides and bark in the surrounding country, also gave employment to a number of hands. It was about the only important manufacturing enterprise in the town at that day.

About 1,000 persons saw the Baltimore Club begin the exhibition base-ball season Saturday at the Huntingdon-avenue grounds by defeating the Philadelphia League Club in a close and interesting game, 4 to 3 being the score. Neither club had its full strength out, and some of the positions were filled by men playing only temporarily there, and the lack of practice was quite noticeable in both teams, but the showing which they made promised well for the future.

The spring term of the Maryland Court of Appeals has begun, but the hearing of arguments will not commence until the 10th.

Obituary.

The following article relative to the death of Charles Pole, a native of this county, is copied from a Shullsburgh, Wisconsin, paper:

Died at his home in this village on Sunday, March 25, 1888, Charles Pole, in the seventy-fourth year of his age.

The announcement of the death of Charles Pole brings sorrow to many hearts in LaFayette county. On Sunday morning last he seemed to be in usual good health and the morning being stormy with strong wind and falling snow he went down town to get some one to go out to his farm and feed his stock. He returned to his home after a short absence and without removing his overcoat or cap sat down by the stove and placing his feet upon the hearth he said he would warm a little before going to the barn to feed his horse. He seemed to be somewhat oppressed in his breathing but his wife, who sat beside him, felt no alarm as it was not unusual for him to breathe heavily. In a moment his feet slipped from the hearth, his head dropped forward and without further warning he was dead. Dr. Hayden was summoned, friends and neighbors came, but all too late. His death resulted from heart disease, and he had often remarked that he expected his death would be sudden.

Mr. Pole was one of the oldest settlers of this county, having removed here in 1857 from Frederick county (now Carroll county), Maryland, where he was born on the 9th of October, 1814. After his arrival here he engaged in mining, which occupation he followed until 1852. His old associates in pioneer life have nearly all preceded him to the mysterious bourne, yet no man has ever left behind him a purer record than Charles Pole. No page of his life's history is blemished with the record of a wrong and although many of his good deeds are remembered and cherished by his friends a countless number more of secret kind and charitable acts are only known to the recording angel above. He possessed the confidence of the people to an extraordinary degree and although against his wishes, he was often compelled by his friends to accept offices of honor and of trust. He was twice elected as representative to the Territorial Legislature and twice to the Assembly of the State. He was many times Chairman of this town and always discharged every private and official duty fearlessly and honestly. Personally he was a companionable man, of pleasant disposition and of strictly moral and sober habits, with a peculiar ability to make himself agreeable to all. In his domestic relations he was a kind husband and an indulgent parent, who seemed to find his greatest happiness within the home circle. He leaves a widow and three children and two sisters—Mrs. Abner Baile, of New Windsor, Md., and Mrs. John Ogborn—to mourn his death. Rev. Christopher Cook, an old personal friend of the deceased, officiated at the funeral. His remains were followed to their last resting place by a large concourse of sympathizing friends and interred in the Evergreen cemetery.
