FARMERS' DEPARTMENT

"He who by the plow would thrive,
Himself must either hold or drive."

From the Maryland Farmer.

WINTERING ANIMALS.

In traveling over the country, I observe that the practice is still common to feed horses, cattle and sheep out in the field and in open yards, that is, without shelter, and many still feed stalks and hay on the ground at all times.

On one occasion I halted and remarked to a hireling who was foddering on the ground quite a large stock of cattle with hay from a stack, that the cattle wasted much of the fodder where the ground was soft and wet, as it was at that time.

"O, yes," he replied, "they tramp more than half of it into the mud such times as this, and never eat it."

I said, then—

"I suppose you give them enough more than you do when the ground is dry or frozen, to make up for the waste."

"No," he replied, "I generally feed them about the same in all weather."

I asked him if animals kept thus were usually very fat in the spring.

"Why, no; of course they are not. We are not trying to fatten; if we can only get them through till grass comes, we are all right."

"You mean if you can keep them alive?"

"Yes, and not let them get too much down."

"Do you think there is any profit in keeping cattle thus?" I asked.

"Well, no; but farmers here don't expect profit out of keeping cattle in winter. They use up the fodder and some hay, but we don't feed much hay; we make them live mostly on fodder and straw."

"You don't think that stock so kept gain any?" I asked.

"Gain! no. They all fall off, and some get very poor by spring, and last winter we lost three."

"You do not mean that you lost three from poverty?" I asked.

"Yes, I suppose it was poverty, because they were weak. They got so that if they slipped they would fall down, and they couldn't get up. Then, you know, if there was nobody there, the others would soon 'hook 'em' to death."

Having satisfied myself that a conclusion arrived at more than forty years since was fully sustained by the young man's answers to my interrogations, viz., that there was great loss in keeping stock thus, I drove on without further comment, other than that I thought it would pay to feed in stables, to which he made some inaudible reply as I drove sway.

Designing farm barns and stables have been, for years, the most important branch of my profession, hence I naturally observe the character of all that I see, and the necessity for them in districts where they are wanting.

I spent a winter in the grazing district of Southwestern Virginia two years since, and there had a better opportunity than I had previously enjoyed of observing the effect of what we would here call a mild winter, on cattle, sheep and horses, out of doors.

I had twenty years experience in feeding such animals within doors and out, in Eastern New York and New England, hence could compare practically the effects of the winter in that latitude with that of Virginia, and I was forced to the conclusion that the animals I have mentioned suffer more in winter, exposed to all storms, in Virginia, than they do in New York and New England. The storms in Virginia were, in the main, cold rains, mixed with sleet or hail, keeping the cattle wet a large portion of the time, with occasionally a snow of from one to six inches, which rarely laid on the ground more than a few days at a time, and the ground was muddy, and remained so nearly all the winter.

I went out among a number of lots of cattle during storms to observe the effect, and I found a large proportion of them shivering, even at midday.

I often thought, whilst on this tour of observation, of what a Pennsylvania farmer once told me. He said that he would give an ounce of gold for every ounce of butter made from, or fat made in an animal whilst it shivered.

I concluded, from the effect of the cold storms on the cattle that I saw, that he was very safe in making so liberal an offer. The animals of every description were thin, and apparently losing condition daily.

In fact, I visited farms and examined stock in seven different counties, and only saw two lots of cattle stabled, and these were in good, thriving condition, though the food consumed and wasted by these stabled animals was not more than 50 per cent. of the quantity used by the same number of animals without shelter and fed on the ground.

I made particular inquiry of the owners of animals, as to how the condition of their stock in the spring compared with what it was in the autumn previous, and all admitted that the live weight was, no doubt, from 10 to 20 per cent. less in the spring.

I found a number of farmers who were said, by their neighbors, to have hides and hay to sell every spring. I saw several herds, among which were animals that, if they survived the winter, their hides would be their chief value in the spring; but in no instance did I see a surplus of hay. But in numerous instances I saw corn fodder enough wasted to have wintered all the stock on the farm well without any hay, had it been housed and cut and steamed and fed in stables, as the New York, New England and Pennsylvania farmer would have economized it.

I observed that sheep ranging the pastures, in which manner they were all kept, were thin; and I was told that they would eat but little hay. I went and examined the surface where they were grazing, and found that they were gnawing the crowns of the grass plants out in many instances. There was very little herbage, the previous autumn having been excessively dry. I need scarcely state what was the condition of pastures thus treated the following season.

The colts wintered in this manner were generally small, humped or high-backed, steep-rumped and low-headed. After a careful observation of the effects of wintering animals in that latitude, as I have described, I arrived at this conclusion: that were these grazers to sell one-fourth of their acres, at the price at which they could be sold, and invest the entire proceeds of such sale in economically constructed and spacious farm barns and stables, in which to store all their products and house their cattle, and they would feed judiciously, the net annual proceeds of the reduced farm, with the buildings, would be 30 to 50 per cent. more than that they were realizing from the whole, to say nothing of the pleasure arising from the more profitable system. I am satisfied that the state of things that I have described is not confined to that locality only, but that it prevails to a lamentable extent even in high latitudes.

Stock owners, let me entreat you, for your own pecuniary interest, if not for humanity sake, not to let the current winter pass unimproved by you in making preparations, by some means or other, by which every animal you own in the winter of '72 and '73 shall have a good, comfortable shelter, and plenty to eat.

Let me also remind you that stables, to be profitable, must be kept cleanly, and be well ventilated, and that when properly managed, the manure will be removed from them at least twice in 24 hours, and not a drop of rain will be allowed to fall on it until it is spread on the surface of the land. The longer it there remains, the greater will be the profit derived from it. Let me say, in conclusion, what few farmers have yet learned, viz., that they cannot afford to build any structure they may require, not even a kennel or a sty, without calling to their aid the best architect obtainable, as, in everything else, "the best is generally the cheapest."—This is particularly true in employing an achitect, as they all charge about the same rates, which are 3½ per cent. on the cost of the buildings for which plans are furnished, for full plans and specifications.

He must be a great novice, if he has had proper instruction and experience, if he cannot save much more than that amount in economizing space and materials, and in adapting the respective parts of the structure to their legitimate uses, and in the selection of materials for their respective uses.

Many men act as though they thought all men were born architects; but few, however, claim they are born good mechanics, and they will generally admit that a little experience is necessary to constitute them such; but anybody can be a farmer or an architect, yet the list of either are none too good.

Very respectfully,
J. WILKINSON,
Rural Architect, etc., Baltimore, Md.

The Wheat Crop--Cause of Failure.

"The experience of many years has led me to the conclusion that the deterioration of the wheat crop is mainly attributable to the improper and untimely use of barn-yard manure. In our practice the clover sod is turned down and planted with corn. The ground is again plowed in the spring and sowed with oats, and upon the stubble of this all the barn-yard manure is put; then plowed again and sowed with wheat. This delicate plant is thus subjected to the rawness and grossness of barn-yard manure, with all its germs of flies, worms, lice and bugs—seemingly a sufficient cause of the unsuccessful growth of a grain so pure and delicate as wheat. Corn is the hog of plants, and will devour food of any quality and thrive upon it. Here, then, upon the sod to be plowed for corn, is the place for barn-yard manure. Bury it deep, and when the corn is cut off, break the stubble even with the ground during the winter. In the spring harrow the ground well, sow your oats upon it and roll it.—You will thus keep your manure where you put it, and not subject the oat crop to be thrown down by it. When this crop is removed, bring your manure to the surface by deep plowing and thorough tillage. The barn-yard manure having thus received proper preparation, is a fit food for the wheat plant."

The above is from a letter written by the Commissioner of Agriculture, Judge Watts, to the Rural Messenger. We agree with his views as to the condition to which manure should be brought for the use of the wheat crop, but farmers in Western New York would prefer composting it during the summer and applying it as a top-dressing just previous to sowing. We fear very little of the manure would find its way into the wheat plant if applied as the Commissioner advises.—American Rural Home.

RUSTY straw is one of the most dangerous of blood-poisons. It induces distemper, it vitiates the blood, reduces the condition of the animal, takes away the appetite, and opens the door for colic, skin diseases, swellings and fevers. It is only fit for litter.

TO THE PUBLIC.

THE subscriber most respectfully informs the public that he has made arrangements with Dr. Thos. H. Whaland to carry on his near Chestertown, for the present year.
His long experience in the business and his reputation as a Miller warrants him in the belief that he can give universal satisfaction.—As soon as practicable he intends to keep on hand a good supply of
CORN MEAL,
WHEAT FLOUR of all Grades,
HORSE FEED, &c., &c.,
which he is determined to sell at reduced prices.
He only wants to make the regular toll, and will be compelled to sell for Cash only as his capital is small and he does not intend to keep books.
He will use all means to make the Mill a public convenience as well as a source of profit. A trial is all he asks.
Most respectfully,
SAMUEL A. ANTHONY.

THE BICKFORD

IMPROVED
Family Knitting Machines.

PERFECTION in work and simplicity of construction, has been attained in this Machine. It knits both circular and flat web with perfect selvage, edge, making a perfect hand stitch. It narrows and widens, knitting heels and toes of stockings to perfection, with ribbed or plain stitch, and is a Crocheting as well as Knitting Machine.
It makes all the intricate fancy stitches of the Crocheting needle better than hand work. It is so simple that a child can operate it, and the rapidity of its work is truly wonderful—20,000 stitches per minute.
This Machine has carried the First Prize at the Maryland State Fair, Maryland Institute and Virginia State Fair, this Fall, and was the principal Machine at all of them. They are more valuable in the family than the Sewing Machine. Price $25 and $35. Send for circulars. Agents wanted in every part of Maryland. Liberal terms.

THE EUREKA
FANNING MILL.
THE GREATEST INVENTION OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY!
Farmers Look to Your Interest!
THE attention of Farmers and Mechanics is particularly directed to the combined economy, utility and practicability of the Eureka Mill, and to the many other advantages it possesses over every other Fanning Mill which has been introduced to the public.
It is the fruit of long and patient investigation by the inventor, who has made it his constant study for over twenty years. He has secured several patents for Mills, and has always been rewarded with the best of success. But not feeling satisfied with his former attainments, he determined to reach the climax, and he now believes that his new invention will warrant him in exclaiming in the joy of his heart, like the philosopher, Phythagoras—EUREKA!—signifying in the Grecian language, "I have found it." This has given the name to this new Mill.
In this Mill are all the former improvements to which have been added several more, adding still greater advantages than were at first anticipated, or even thought possible by the inventor himself. It embraces the three great essentials necessary in every invention:
It combines ECONOMY, UTILITY and PRACTICABILITY!
THE "EUREKA" MILL
Is small and lighter, and is capable of doing more and better work in a given time than any other Mill ever invented.
IT IS THE ONLY MILL that will successfully remove from wheat all such pests as Cockle, Garlic, Oats, Rye, &c.
Should an extra quality of grain for seed or gristing purposes be required, it can be so arranged as to catch in one box perfect grain, and in the other, grain fit for market or mill. Here is made a great saving usually lost sight of: for nearly one quarter of the grain cleaned in the common Mills is lost when sown, on account of shrunken kernels and inferior grain. The Eureka Mill saves all this, and gives seed every kernel of which will grow when put into the ground, and this saving will, in a short time, pay for the Mill.
HINES & BURCHINAL,
Chestertown, Maryland.
Owners of the Mill, are having them manufactured at the Sash Factory and Planing Mill of Noland & Co., Port Deposit, Md., which is a guarantee that they will be put up in the best manner. je17-tf.
