Farmers' Department.

"He who by the plow would thrive,
Himself must either hold or drive."

AMERICAN FARMERS

You can not be too often reminded that what we should aim at is, fewer crops, cleaner culture, and a larger yield per acre. We are a great beef-eating people, and are taking kindly to good mutton when it can be found. Already a large proportion of the beef consumed in the Atlantic cities is raised west of the Mississippi. The price for the moment happens to be low, but it will not remain so long. The farmer who raises good beef or mutton in New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, or any of the older settled States, need not fear that the half-wild cattle of Texas or elsewhere are going to drive him to the wall. There is no sort of danger. Unaided, nature can not compete with agriculture any better than the Indian can compete with the Anglo-Saxon. Our population is rapidly increasing, and the demand for meat will continue to increase from year to year. The causes which lend to an over-supply for a few months are only temporary. The demand is unceasing, and he is a wise farmer who looks ahead and quietly and perseveringly improves his farm and his stock. He is certain of his reward. Wool, mutton, beef, pork, cheese, butter, milk, poultry, and all other animal products will be wanted more and more as the condition of the world improves. There are millions of people, even in Europe, who seldom taste fresh meat. An Irishman eats double the meat and does double the work here that he did at home.

Even the chinese in this country eat meat as soon as they can earn money enough to buy it.

The point I want to get at is this: We have a large country. Land is comparatively cheap, and labor comparatively high. Crops are great in extent but small in yield, and many of our farms are getting more weedy and less productive. Now, what we must aim at is to make them cleaner and richer. We must devote less land to the production of wheat and other grain this is sold, and more to the production of such crops as are fed out to animals on the farm. We all know it is better to raise 300 bushels of wheat from ten acres than to plow, seed, and reap twenty or thirty acres to get the same amount. We obtain no more money for the crop in the one case than in the other, but the profits are duadrupled.—The market is not gluttered with grain, and there will be more meat and wool to sell, and more manure to use. To bring this about, we must summer fallow when necessary; sow clover more frequently, and not sell a pound; let our land lie longer in grass and when it is broken up and planted to corn, cultivate it very thoroughly, and not overcrop it before it is seeded down again. In some cases it will pay to summer-fallow, and then seed the land down to grass without a grain crop. We must aim to save labor, enrich our land, reduce the area under tillage, and, when it is plowed, cultivate thoroughly to kill weeds and develop the latent plant-food in the soil. Plant-food is the farmer's capital. It is present in large quantities in most of our soils, but a great proportion of it lies idle. Our profits will be in proportion to the amount of this plantfood, that we can render available and keep in active circulation without allowing it to diminish faster than fresh quantities are developed from the soil by the decomposing and disintegrating action of the atmosphere.—American Agriculturist.

PRESIDENT GRANT'S LONG BRANCH ESTABLISHMENT.—According to the Long Branch correspondent of the New York World, President Grant and Gen. Porter have together eleven horses at the seaside, brought from Washington, and one donkey. The writer says:

"The President has seven horses—a pair of large carriage horses, three of the trotting species, and two used for hacking by the young Grant's and for marketing. The carriage horses are magnificent creatures, of Kentucky stock, and cost $2,000. The fast or trotting horses are not so grand or imposing, but cost more, while the others are ordinary horses of no considerable value. His carriages consist of a barouche, a dog-cart, a light wagon for speed in trotting, and a pony phaeton. The stable is splendidly furnished with harnesses for the various turnouts, saddles, bridles and clothing. Indeed, it is just such a stable as you might expect, considering the President' great taste and judgment in this direction. The estimated cost of the stable is $9,950. The President's dog-cart is considered the most stylish thing of the kind ever seen here. It is his favorite vehicle. I saw it pass up Ocean avenue. And the harness, too—bright, massively golden, and gorgeous—are strictly in keeping with the magnificence of the horses, while the drivers are jet black, dressed in white corduroy and flannel trimmed with silver, glossy hats, faces and top-boots."

WHY ANIMALS NEED SALT.—Professor James H. Johnson, of Scotland, says that half the saline matter of the blood (75 per cent.) consists of common salt, and as this is partly dissolved every day through the skin and kidneys, the necessity of continuing supplies of it to the healthy body is sufficiently obvious. The bile also contains soda (one of the ingredients of salt) as a special and indispensable constituent, and so do all the cartilages of the body. Stint the supply of salt, and neither will the bile be able properly to assist digestion, nor the cartilages to be built up again as fast as they naturally waste. It is better to place salt where the stock can have free access to it, than to give it occasionally in small quantities. They will help themselves to what they need, if allowed to do so at pleasure, otherwise when they become salt hungry, they may take more than is wholesome.

"ONE who knows" makes it a point to select a cow with a yellow skin. One whose skin is pale or colorless is not, he says, half so likely to produce good butter.

JOSEPH S. HOWE says that one of the chief hindrances to agricultural progress is the reluctance farmers feel toward giving the public the benefit of their experience, either by writing or by speech.

AN IRISHMAN'S ANSWER.—A lawyer built him an office in the form of a hexagon or six square. The novelty of the structure attracted the attention of some Irishmen who were passing by. They made a full stop and viewed the building very critically. The lawyer, somewhat disgusted at their curiosity, raised the window, put his head out and addressed them—

"What do you stand there for, like a pack of blockheads, gazing at my office? Do you take it for a church?"

"Faix," answered one of them, "I was thinking so, till I saw the devil poke his head out of the windy."

Wit and Humor.

A YOUNG woman delegate in the recent Ohio Convention of Woman Suffragists plumply said:

"For my own part, I love men individually and collectively, better than women; and so, I am sure, does every one of my sex, if they, like me, would utter their real sentiments. I am more anxious for man's elevation and improvement than woman's, and so is every true woman."

That's the reason she wants to vote.

DURING the late war some children were talking of their brothers and fathers who had been captured as prisoners of war.—Many tales of fortresses and camps were told, the speakers evidently priding themselves very much on the suffering of their relatives, when a little fellow, who had been silent, now spoke up. "That's nuthin'!" said he, "I've got an uncle in prison, too, and he ain't never been to war nuther."

"I WEEDED my friends," said an eccentric old man, "by hanginging a piece of stair carpet out of my first floor front window with a constable's announcement affixed. It had the desired effect. I soon saw who were my friends. It was like firing a gun at a gigeon house. They forsook the building at the report.

"LOOK out there! what are you kicking my dog for?"

"I'm kicking him 'cause he's full of fleas, and I dont want to gee 'em on my clothes."

"Fleas—the deuce! Why, that dog sleeps with me."

"Yes, confound you, that's where he gets 'em."

"Go it old fellow," said two idle scapegraces to an honest laborer at work.—"Work away, while we play; sow, and we'll reap."

"Very likely, my lads," said the old man coolly. "I am sowing hemp."

A PENNSYLVANIA Sunday-school scholar being asked to quote some Scriptural text which forbids a man having more than one wife, promptly responded: "No man can serve two masters."

THE blacks and mulattoes of Jacksonville, Florida, have declared war against each other. The mulattoes have organized a society to which the highly colored are not admitted. Hence the trouble.

A TIPSY fellow, who mistook a globe lamp with letters on it for the queen of night, exclaimed,—"I'll be blest if somebody hain't stuck an advertisement on the moon."

IN what way does a lady treat a man like a telescope? When she pulls him out, looks him through, and then shuts him up.

MUSIC is the food of love; beef and mutton that of matrimony.
