CHRISTMAS.

It is supposed that the observance of the day on which is celebrated the nativity of Christ was instituted by Telesphorus about the year 150, but there is no certainty that a feast or festival for the commemoration of this event was established before about the year 190. At first there was no uniformity as to the time of this observance, some holding the festival in April or May, and others in January. It is very improbable that Christ's nativity actually occurred on the 25th of December, as the rainy season of Judea is then at its height, and the shepherds would not have been watching their flocks by night on the plains. Among the causes that co operated in fixing this period as the proper one, perhaps the most powerful was, that almost all the heathen nations regarded the winter solstice as a most important point of the year, as the beginning of the renewed life and activity of the powers of nature and of the gods who were originally merely symbolical personifications of these. In more northerly countries this fact must have made itself peculiarly palpable—hence the Celts and Germans, from the oldest times, celebrated the season with the greatest festivities.—Many of the beliefs and usages of the old Germans and Romans relating to this matter passed over from heathenism to Christianity and have partly survived to the present day. The church sought to banish the deep-rooted heathen feeling by adding its grandly devised liturgy, besides dramatic representations of the birth of Christ and the first events of his life. Hence sprang the "manger-songs," Christmas carols and Christmas dramas, which, at certain times and places, degenerated into farces or fool's feasts. Hence also originated at a later period, the Christ-trees, or Christmas-trees, adorned with lights and gifts, the custom of reciprocal presents and of special Christmas meats and dishes. In the Roman Catholic church three masses are performed at Christmas; one at midnight, one at daybreak, and one in the morning. The day is also celebrated by the Anglo-Catholic church—special psalms are sung, a special preface is made in the communion service, and the Athanasian creed is said or sung.—The Lutheran church on the Continent likewise observes Christmas; but the Presbyterian churches in Scotland, and the English dissenters reject it, in its religious aspect, as a "human invention," and as "savoring of papistical will-worship," although in England dissenters as well as churchmen keep it as a social holiday. But within the last hundred years, these festivities have greatly fallen off. They at one time lasted with more or less brilliancy till Candlemas, and with great spirit till Twelfth-day; but now a meeting in the evening, composed when possible, of the various branches and members of a family, is all that distinguishes the day above others.

NEW YEAR'S DAY.

The custom of celebrating, by some religious observance, accompanied by festive rejoicing, the first day of the year, prevailed among most of the ancient nations. The Jews, Egyptians, Chinese, Romans and Mohammedans, although differing at the time from which they reckoned the commencement of the year, all regarded it as a day of special interest. In Rome the year anciently began in March, and when Numa, according to the old legend, transferred it to January 1, that day was held sacred to Janus Bifrons, who was thus supposed to turn at once back upon the old and forward into the new year. On the establishment of Christianity the usage of a solemn inauguration of the new year was retained, but it was not until the sixteenth century that January 1 was universally accepted as the first day of the year. The early Fathers of the church prohibited in Christian use all festive celebration, and directed that the Christian year should be opened with a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer. The mandate was only partially observed. The festal character of the day was pertinaciously preserved, but it was also observed as a day of prayer, especially after the year began with January 1, as that day, being the eighth after Christ's nativity, was held to be the commemoration of his circumcision. From the earliest recorded celebration we find notice of feasting and the interchange of presents. Suetonius alludes to the bringing of presents to the capital, and Tacitus refers to the practice of giving and receiving New Year's gifts. In England we find many examples of it, even as a part of the public expenditure of the Court, so far down as the reign of Charles II. In many countries the night of New Year's eve, (St. Sylvester's eve was celebrated with great festivities, prolonged till after twelve o'clock, when the new year was ushered in with congratulations, complimentary visits and mutual wishes for a happy new year. This is an ancient Scottish custom prevailing also in many parts of Germany, where the form of wish—"Prosst—(for the Latin prosit) neu-jahr"—"May the new year be happy"—sufficiently attests the antiquity of the custom. In many places the practice of tolling bells at midnight, and thus "ringing in the new year" is still observed. Many religious communions are accustomed to celebrate it with a special service. In the Roman Catholic church the Te Deum is still sung at the close of the old year, and New Year's day is a holiday of strict obligation.
