Curious Ideas of America Held by French Peasants

What One Frenchman Carried From America to His Club---Three "Priceless Treasures," Rules for Draw Poker, Recipe for Gin Cocktails, Hair-Raising Yarns.

Special to the American Sentinel.
(By W. B. Seabrook.)

Avignon, France.—Penny newspapers, free schools and cheap traveling facilities have rendered it possible for even the humblest citizen of every enlightened nation to form a more or less intelligent concept of the most striking characteristics and the leading contemporaneous events of every other civilized country. The newspapers, especially the cheap illustrated journals, are the greatest of all educators. For example, the French gamin, who has just cleaned my boots, knows that "Monsieur Taft," the newly elected president of the United States of America, is one of the fattest men in the world, "weighs nearly as much as a horse," and likes Georgia possum. He knows this just as the plow-boy in Kansas or Iowa knows that President Fallieres of France has a Santa Claus beard and that Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany wears a fiercely pointed military moustache. When I arose for breakfast on the morning of January 13th, although I happened to be in a tiny fisher-village on the Mediterranean coast, far from any railroad line, I read in the columns of the "Petit Provencal" (published at Marseilles and distributed by the rural carriers) that Hon. Benjamin R. Tillman, on the morning of the 12th, had attacked Roosevelt on the floor of the Senate.

The wide circulation of such newspapers, the possibilities of self-education offered by the inventions and institutions of the present day, render all the more astonishing the general idea that the word "America" evokes in the mind of the average adult peasant or workingman in the south of France. Among the lower classes, with whom I have recently been mingling and whose life I have been trying to study, I find that the mere words "Etats Unis" almost invariably awaken in their imagination the picture of a primitive, half-savage, partially explored continent, yielding enormous products of fruit and grain, but teeming with naked black slaves, warlike redskins, skyscrapers, trusts, grizzly bears, and other monsters equally bloodthirsty and dangerous. They have a vague notion that the territory in the environs of New York has been reclaimed from savagery, and that colosal fortunes are to be gained there by working on a railroad section gang or peddling oranges.

Nearly a decade ago, Col. William Cody (Buffalo Bill) and his Wild West show made a triumphal tour of France, with real Indians in warpaint and feathers, a herd of buffaloes, a gang of rowdy cowboys, armed with six-shooters, which they discharged in every direction upon the slightest encouragement, bucking bronchos, desperados, "bad men" and long-haired trappers of the plains. The peasants are still talking of that show. It was the event of their peaceful lifetime, second in importance only to the fall of the second empire. They believed, and still believe, that this howling, bloody massacre-on-wheels was the mild and faithful portrayal of daily life and manners in America. Judging from what I have seen and heard, it will take two or three generations of schooling and newspaper reading to get that impression out of their system.

Furthermore, these bizarre notions are not always confined to the illiterate peasants. In totally dissimilar surroundings, in a different social and intellectual atmosphere—in a club-room at Avignon—I made the acquaintance of a Frenchman whose views on the subject of America were no less curious, and who caused me no little embarrassment in calling upon me, one evening, to bear witness to the truth of the remarkable statements, with which, for the past forty years, he had been regaling the ears of his fellow club members.

This gentleman is nearly eighty years old, but still robust and extremely talkative, especially when he has absorbed three or four successive tumblers of absinthe. Fifty years ago he was a mining speculator in California, and the history of his early life—the inside history, to which he never refers, but which is known to all the older citizens of Avignon—is like a page from one of Victor Hugo's novels. It will bear repeating.

His parents, who were of the nobility, bequeathed to him a considerable fortune and an ambitious, adventurous spirit. Shortly after his father's death, the entire world was startled by the discovery of gold in fabulous quantities on the Pacific coast, and the young man's mind was dazzled by the glittering vision. Converting all his property into negotiable paper, he took ship to Bordeaux, reached New York safely, joined a band of prospectors, and five months later crossed the Rockies, in a "prairie schooner." Fortune smiled upon him; a succession of daring speculations placed him at the head of an enormous mining syndicate whose chief offices were located at Sacramento, and his excellent administrative ability enabled him to hold his ground. At thirty years of age, he was a power in the West, and his name was known from Vancouver to Los Angeles.

A year or two afterward he recrossed the Atlantic to personally superintend the establishment of foreign offices at Paris and Madrid, and, having successfully concluded these transactions, made arrangements for his return to California. Profiting by the rude experiences of his former voyage, he chose another route, and shipped in a vessel bound directly for San Francisco, via Cape Horn. He was in the prime of life and at the height of his career. Hazard willed that a certain Spanish priest, a Jesuit, had engaged passage on the same vessel, accompanied by a ravishingly beautiful young woman, whom he introduced as his niece. Forty years ago, it was a long, long way from the English Channel to the Golden Gate, and time hung heavily upon the gallant young Frenchman's hands; the inevitable happened: he became violently enamored with the churchman's charming niece. His courtly flattery and respectful attentions were tolerated, but one beautiful moonlight evening he overstepped the bounds of propriety. The young woman, blushing with indignation, repulsed him violently, ordered him instantly to leave her presence, and from that moment refused to recognize his existence. The following day, when he offered to apologize, she turned her back and walked away.

Now the handsome financier's superb egotism and his characteristically French idea of feminine morals suggested to his mind only one explanation of the young woman's attitude,—the role which he had aspired to occupy was already filled. Angry and jealous, he sought a quarrel with the priest and one day, at the dinner table, forgot himself so far as to hurl into the Jesuit's face the bald accusation:

"Your pretended niece is not your niece."

The priest bit his lips and responded not a word. The affair made quite a scandal on board the ship; the priest and his companion moved to another table; the accusation formed the principle subject of conversation for a week, and was eventually forgotten, apparently the incident was closed. Certainly the Frenchman, who, immediately upon his arrival at Sacramento, plunged into his accumulated office affairs, forgot all about it.

A year passed. The mining syndicate had, to all appearances, become solid as the rock of Gibraltar, and Monsieur X, who had been made its president, was rated a multi-millionaire. But in the midst of this increasing prosperity, he and two or three of his confidential aides suddenly realized that something was wrong; certain speculations which seemed bound to succeed fell flat; certain mutually advantageous offers for purchase or sale of property were refused for no apparent reason; in brief, some powerful enemy was "blocking their game." Successive efforts to recoup were inexplicably disastrous; months passed, and one fine morning came the crash. The Frenchman was ruined. Not only was the syndicate insolvent, but his perosnal fortune was engulfed.

And behind it all was the pale little priest. He too was the son of noble parents, he too had inherited a fortune. In addition, and above all, he was a Jesuit.

Monsieur X, the ruined financier, returned to his native country, opened a life insurance office in Avignon, and, from that moment until the evening I met him at the club, he has been leading the peaceful existence of a modest, well-to-do bourgeois. His disastrous reverse has not left him crushed or broken hearted. He is not even sad. Let the socialists and democrats scoff as they will, I maintain that it is worth something to be the son of a real nobleman, to have the blood of kings and crusaders in one's veins. Monsieur X is "game" to the core.

But I have strayed far from my original subject—have almost forgotten what it was. I had intended to describe, I think, a few of this aged speculator's pipe-dreams regarding customs and conditions in the United States. He is the center and life of the little club. Returning from America many years ago, he contributed to its welfare three priceless treasures, the rules for draw poker, the recipe for gin cocktails, and an inexhaustible fund of hair-raising anecdotes. He poses as a traveler who knows his America, knows it through and through, and his statements are received as gospel. To sum up his ideas in a word, he imagines that all America is a sort of a huge mining camp, that the typical American gentleman still wears boots and spurs and carries a 44 calibre, double action, old army model Colt six-shooter. He is growing old, and it is natural that he should recollect only the thing is that impressed him most vividly, and the most patriotic American cannot pretend that Sacramento in 1850 was a model of enlightened civilization. I tried to persuade him that American customs had been slightly modified during the last half century, but in vain.

DEFERRED LOCALS.

Shipley Items.

Mrs. Geo. C. Freyman, who has been quite ill, is out again. Mrs. Elizabeth Wilhide is still confined to her room, she has been sick for a long time. Mrs. Grove J. Shipley has been quite ill for three weeks, too; but seems a little better now.

Our calithumpian band was out in full attendance last week to serenade a couple of couples of our young friends who have started life together; they have our best wishes for a long, prosperous and happy sojourn together.

Mr. Grove J. Shipley lost a fine young mare on the 17th inst. Death caused by hanging in the stall of her stable. By some unknown means she got the halter chain wrapped around her neck and it seemed at the same time that the chain ring and spring got in the crack between two manger boards from the inside, about 16 inches from the top of manger, thus making the halter chain both short and fast. It is supposed she sprang back what she could in said position and stayed there until she was choked and then fell. To those who saw how the chain was wrapped and anchored, it seemed quite a mystery.

Manchester Items.

On the night of Jan. 20th Messrs. and Mesdames C. Miller, H. T. J. LaMotte, Wm. F. Masenhimer, W. W. Wentz and daughter Isabel, Mr. G. W. J. Everhart, Mrs. M. L. Morelock, Mrs. J. M. Motter, Miss Fannie Ross, Mr. Chas. W. Motter, Mrs. Wm. H. Shower, son Ross and daughter Fannie enjoyed a sledding to Hampstead and spent the evening with Mr. and Mrs. John H. Staub. After several hours of fun making, music and games the equipment of the company was opened up and abundant refreshments of sandwiches, coffee and cake were served ere the farewells were said and a most delightful ride home enjoyed.

After the regular business of Manchester Rebekah Lodge No. 18, I. O. O. F., was concluded, all repaired to the lower hall that was arranged for a social and dance. Messrs. Rupp and Dandy of Alesia put in an appearance about 8 P. M., and soon had the young folks whirling over the smooth floor to the music of their fine selections. By 10 P. M. some fifty young ladies and gentlemen, among whom Hampstead and Greenmount were represented, were enjoying the dancing. Refreshments were served by the committee of Rebekahs.

On Wednesday evening, Jan. 20th, a company of friends went to the home of Mr. Robert Brilhart, south of town, and gave them a surprise. Mr. and Mrs. B. have only occupied their new home for several months and were about in readiness to receive company when the uncles, aunts and cousins rushed in on them fully equipped for a good time and to enjoy abundant refreshments. They received a hearty welcome and enjoyed a pleasant evening until the midnight hour. Mrs. J. W. Hoffacker entertained the members of the Thimble Circle recently and surprised her guests at refreshments by serving fine large strawberries with cream. Mrs. M. L. Morelock followed a week later by serving watermelon with the refreshments in entertaining the members of the circle.

Miss Fannie G. Ross gave a Merry Widow party at her home, on South Main street, in honor of her guests, Miss Nettie Weaver, of Gettysburg, and her friend Miss Sheets, of New Oxford, that was a very enjoyable affair. Miss Ross had a number of hats with plenty of trimming, a decoration that the gentlemen trimmed for the ladies, and a lot of gay material for the ladies to make into bows for the gentlemen; the judges received a bright yellow bow to designate their position, fancy cards in various colors each in two pieces were distributed among the guests to be matched so that each could select their partner, which created no little fun until all were paired and had received their hats and bows. Added to this were games and song, that made up a most delightful evening's entertainment, while the refreshments were not only abundant but A1 in every respect.

Mr. E. I am not going to tell a snake story but its peer, an unarvnished Cotton Tail story. Mr. Mike Hassett, on Germantown avenue, received a postal card from his cousin in Bradford Co. Pa., last week that has his picture with a friend, about 8 feet apart, with a pole on their shoulders, on which hangs a rabbit, with his hind legs crossed over the pole, and his front feet and nose touching the ground. Mr. H. says the cousin is 6 ft. 6 in. tall, while the other man is somewhat less. He writes and says he shot the rabbit in South Mountain some days before, and his weight is 147 lbs. It is a good shot taken with a woodland scenery for a background. Mr. H. takes much pleasure in showing it.

M. C. I. Notes.

Miss Coral Diller is having her turn of the measles at her home in Detour.

Professor John purchased the property of the late David Stem, which was recently sold.

Mr. Bruce Whitmore spent Saturday and Sunday, January 24 and 25, with us. He is enjoying his work of teaching very much.

Mr. A. C. Wine arrived last week with us. He reports that all those around Denton who were former students are in good health.

Mr. Wilbur Jennings and his sister Laura, of Brownsville, and Miss Margie Lantz, of Thurmont, former students, were among those attending the Bible term.

The work done during the Bible term was very gratifying. The fair weather favored a large attendance and this, in connection with good interest and good instruction, made the work a success. The visitors expressed themselves as feeling perfectly at home and enjoying every hour of it. The meetings at night were well attended.

The lecture delivered by Dr. John Merritte Driver surpassed anything of the kind given here before. For two hours and twenty minutes Dr. Driver held the undivided attention of the audience while he discussed momentous questions regarding the relation of our nation to the Far East. The relations of the three great divisions of the human family, the Hamitic, Semitic, and Japhetic or Aryan—Negroes, Jews, and Anglo-Saxons respectively, were clearly done, and the work of our nation as part of the Anglo-Saxon race in helping to establish order, law, and government was emphasized strongly.

The next number of our lecture course will be given on February 6, by Montaville Flowers, who will recite either "Ben Hur," General Lew Wallace's famous production, or "A Christmas Carol," by Charles Dickens. Montaville Flowers is recognized as an unexcelled reader and impersonator. Several persons in connection with the school at present have had the pleasure of hearing him and speak in the highest terms of his ability.

Uniontown Items.

Rev. George Englar and wife, of Pittsburg, have been visiting Mr. E's. mother and brother, and while here he filled the pulpit for Rev. G. W. Baughman at one service. His boyhood friends are always glad to hear him speak.

Mr. Edgar Selby and wife of Baltimore, visited Mr. S's, father last week. Mr. S. is able to get around on crutches.

Mrs. Baughman spent several days in the city returning on Monday of last week. Her daughter, Miss Mary, came home next day on account of trouble with her eyes. She has been compelled to give up the kindergarten work for a time.

Mrs. Edward Crumbacker has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Frank Bowersox, who is having a severe spell of rheumatism. Other visitors were Mrs. Wardenfelt and son, of Smallwood, at Rev. J. G. Hill's; Mr. Newton Gilbert, of Annapolis, at J. W. Gilbert's; Mr. David Stem and wife, Mr. Joe. Franklin, Mrs. Geo. R. Gehr, Miss Gertrude McAllister, at Mr. Wm. Segafoose's.

Rev. W. P. Englar attended the Bible term at the M. C. I.

Winfield Items.

Mr. A. M. Zile, not having enough ice in the past year, has enlarged his ice house so that he may have enough to supply his customers with ice cream the coming season.

Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Bennett, son and daughter, of Sykesville, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Barnes a few days ago.

Miss Mary Houck, near this place, visited friends and relatives in Frederick last week.

Miss Jane Yingling, of Westminster, has been visiting Miss Edna Zile several days.

Mr. Edgar Pickett and wife, after spending a few weeks with Mr. Pickett's mother, has returned to Long Island where Mr. Pickett is engaged in business.

The oyster supper which was held at this place recently, met with great success. As it was good sleighing the people enjoyed the sleighride and enjoyed themselves at the oyster supper.

Miss Amelia Cover, this place, visited friends and relatives in Baltimore.
