"You are still a youth to me, John,
You are still my bonny beau;
The same as when we plighted troth
Full fifty years ago!
The same as when our wedding bells
Rang out so glad and gay."
And here the good wife breathed a sigh
And shook her locks of gray.

"It seemeth strange to me, John,
Who married you for aye,
Who holds the ring you gave as
The apple of my eye,
To see the youngsters ne'er content
To give their hearts and hands,
As we did in the good old times,
Without the scrip and lands!

"I didn't bring you much, John,
And you had little more;
But we had health in place of wealth,
And plenteous joys in store,
And through the joy and strife, dear,
We each one did our part;
And now we've one another still,
As we had at the start.

"The times uave sadly changed, John,
Since you and I were young;
The marriage tie is lightly held
And many a heart is wrung.
And yet you're young to me, John,
And still my bonny beau;
The same as when we plighted troth
Fully fifty years ago!"

THE SNAKE'S TAIL.

From St. Louis Republic.

The Japanese children play some good games that might help American youngsters through a wintry afternoon. The girls—big girls, too—have a very pretty ball game that they call "Yemari," which means hand ball, but it is not at all the same thing as the hand ball we know. A number of them stand in a circle, one of them takes the ball—they use ode about two inches in diameter—and throws it perpendicularly on the ground. As it rebounds she strikes it back with her open hand. This she does as often as she can do so without moving from her place in the circle, but when it rebounds nearer to some other girl—as it will be sure to do soon—it is the part of that girl to strike it down. So the game goes on till some girl fails to hit when she should, or to make it rebound, and then she is cast out of the circle. The game goes on till only one girl is left, and then she has the honors of the game—"kachi," or victory, as the girls call it.

There is another merry game called "catching the snake's tail." One player is selected to be the catcher, and the rest range themselves in a row, one behind the other, each child putting his or her hands on the shoulders of the child in front of him

The catcher stands in front of the row some feet away, and when the row is ready the game commences, and it consists of the catcher's efforts to catch the last child in the row, while the row defends its tail, the snake's tail. This is usually the smallest child playing, for the row is graduated by size. The catcher must not push anyone in the row, and the chain or the row must not be broken, either action constituting a "foul"; when the "tail" is caught that child becomes catcher, and the catcher becomes the tail.

A variation on this game is for the catcher to cry out that he will catch a child. "Which child do you want?" asks the head of the row, and then the catcher says third, or fifth, or whatever he will, and then the row tries to defend that child under the same conditions as before.

Historic Bride-Cake Makers.

From the N. Y. Ledger.

Sixty-one years ago the Duchess of Kent and her young daughter, the Princess Victoria, visited the old town of Chester, the quaintest in all England, for the purpose of officially opening a new bridge that was to bring all kinds of importance and prosperity to the town. Of course it was an immense event for Chester, and every one did something to make the visit of the great folks memorable. Richard Bolland was the poor but ambitious proprietor of a cake shop, and he churned his brains mightily to devise some attractive method of showing his loyal appreciation of the visit. In a happy moment he decided to make some small cakes of transcendent excellence, put them in a fancy box, and present them to the young Princess. Happy thought! the Princess was delighted with the cakes, and how long their flavor lingered in her memory is shown by the fact that many years later, when the Prince of Wales was to be married, Victoria gave a commission to Bolland to prepare the wedding cake for this great event. It was no ordinary wedding cake that Mr. Bolland produced, either, and its exhibition earned him such tremendous fame that every English bride of wealth and prominence who was married since then has had the Chester baker prepare her wedding cake. Descendants of the original Bolland now conduct the shop, but they use the same recipe that proved so successful in the days of Victoria's childhood. Even at that time the recipe was an old one. It is needless to say it is treasured as a secret. No cake is sent out until it has matured for at least six months, and better results are attained when it is two years old, as the flavor, like good wine, becomes mellower and rich with the passage of time. This system necessitates the keeping of a big stock of the cake, and there are never less than two thousand pounds on hand. Some of the cakes are prodigiously heavy, that for the Prince of Wales weighing almost five hundred pounds. The oven in which they are baked is as large as the average kitchen.

What Pleases a Woman.

It pleases her to be told that she is fascinating.

It pleases her to be called a well-dressed woman.

It pleases a woman to be called a sensible little woman.

It pleases her to depend on some man and pretend she is ruling him.

It pleases her to be told that she improves a man by her companionship.

It pleases her to be treated courteously and with respect and to be talked to reasonably.

It pleases her to be treated sensibly and honestly, to be considered and questioned, and not to be treated as a butterfly, with no head nor heart.

It pleases her to be loved and admired by a man who is strong enough to rule and subdue her and make his way her way, to lead her and take care of her.
