AUTOMOBILE ON THE BRAIN

CAMBRIDGE BOYS AND T. R.

Had Fun With the Noted Preacher When he Visited Them.

["Quiz," in Cambridge Gownsman.]

"The Lion and the Unicorn will scatter for their lives
When the mighty big game-hunter from America arrives;
But his prowess in the jungle is as nothing to his fame
In the Copybook-cum-Sunday Chapel-Missionary game.

"Oh, we're ready for you, Teddy, our sins are all reviewed;
We've put away our novels and our statues in the nude.
We've read your precious homilies, and hope to hear some more
At the coming visitation of the model Theodore.

"Now, seriously, Teddy, we're proud to have you here;
Your speeches may be out of date, your methods may be queer;
But you've done some pretty decent things without delay or fuss,
And you're full of grit inside you—and that's what appeals to us.

"So, we're ready for you, Teddy; but take my good advice,
Though sin is really naughty, we find it rather nice;
So when you come to speak to us, in Providence's name,
Give the go-by to the Sunday-Chapel Missionary game."

Cost of Marriage.

[From the Pittsburg Gazette-Times.]

It is not often that one finds anything in the utterance of Chancellor Day to which unqualified approval may be given. He has a happy faculty of taking the wrong side of every question, apparently obsessed with the delusion that to be right one must be unpopular. Therefore let us make haste to take advantage of the rare opportunity to applaud a sentiment of Chancellor Day's before some fresh break makes it impossible. Speaking to the graduating class at Syracuse University, of which he is the head, the chancellor said something that is undeniably true and no less important:

"If you want to know why men marry less than of old, the secret is in the false whim in supporting a wife. He cannot afford to support a wife, the bachelor says. No woman ought to consent to be such a wife. She ought to say: 'I am not seeking or consenting to be supported. There will be two of us. If I cannot earn as much as you, I can save more. We will plan together.'"

The decreasing marriage rate, no doubt, has a direct relation to the increased cost of living. But this false ideal of marriage, which Chancellor Day castigates, is responsible for the undue emphasis put upon this factor. The love of luxury, the desire to enjoy the refinements and pleasures of life, while escaping its toil and sacrifice, have made the cost of living their excuse. It is selfishness, not prudence, that prompts such a reason for celibrate life. Fortunately love is potent enough to overcome such doubts in most cases, but if more women developed the independance and pride extolled by Chancellor Day, no man would be found to take a cowardly refuge behind his self-confessed incompetence to support another besides himself.

The measure of every gift is the all we have.

Howard County Wins Suit Against The B. & O. R. R. Co.

In an opinion delivered by Judge Burke in the case of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company against the county commissioners of Howard county, appealed from the Circuit Court of Carroll county, the Court of Appeals found the railroad company must compensate the county for a judgment paid by the county on account of the death of Alexander S. Hill, late of Baltimore county. A judgment of $6,000 was recovered by the deceased's widow on account of his death, due to the alleged negligence of the commissioners in the care of a public road. Suit was instituted by the county against the railroad company as the actual wrongdoer. A judgment was secured but the Court of Appeals reversed it on account of the absence of essential evidence and awarded a new trial. A second judgment was obtained and this was upheld by the Court of Appeals.

The question hinged on whether or not the railroad company was responsible for the maintenance of the particular road where the accident occurred. The Court of Appeals held that there is evidence tending to show this sufficient to justify the verdict.

STATE'S REVENUE FROM INSURANCE

Total Receipts In Maryland Last Year $314,313.53

Very exhaustive is the report which Mr. B. F. Crouse, state insurance commissioner, has submitted to Governor Crothers showing the operations of his department for the recent fiscal year. The most gratifying feature of the report is that which shows the receipts of the department, the total for the year from all sources being $314,313.53.

These sources and their several amounts were:

Licenses to companies	$58,600
Tax on premiums	197,933.33
Agents' license	28,778
Filing charters	4,450
Filing annual statement	7,290
Abstracts	3,436
Examinations of companies	3,558

There was an income of several thousands of dollars from other sources.

The expenses of the department during the year amounted to $26,773.18.

The report, numerates companies admitted to the state and those which withdrew.

Mr. Crouse expresses regret in his report at the failure of the bill prepared by him codifying all the existing insurance statutes of the state.

Meeting of Baltimore Presbytery.

The three hundred and first stated meeting of the Presbytery of Baltimore, met Tuesday, June 21st, in Aisquith Street Presbyterian Church, Baltimore and among other things appointed a committee of 12 men to solicit funds and organize a board of trustees to incorporate the New Windsor College, in Carroll county. The appointment of this committee followed an interesting address on "New Windsor College" by Rev. Robert P. Kerr. It was also decided to visit Piney Creek Church, in Carroll county, in October to celebrate its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary. The commissioners of the Baltimore Presbytery to the General Assembly made their report.

Intellectual Honesty.

[Omaha Bee.]

Without question there has been, and is still, imperative necessity in this country for intellectual honesty, but we believe a sober analysis of the drift of private and public life today will show a strong and constant tendency in that direction. To begin with we as a people have learned something of our national faults as well as of its virtue; we have learned that we were an extravagant people, in speech and action. That prodigal wealth and unprecedented prosperity have made us careless of the future and reckless of our resources, but we have awakened to the danger of overindulgence and set about to remedy the evil. We are conserving more and more what we used to waste—soil, water, timber, minerals and likewise moral character. In the awakening has come a new vision of moral obligations as imposed in positions of public trust and also in the ranks of private citizenship and individual and corporate business.

The spirit of intellectual honesty is already a dominant spirit in business, politics, the professions. The general disposition is to put the premium on the real man and the ban on the counterfeit. As a rule we are broader and fairer and we hear before we decide. Never was there a time when the people through their public servants were probing as deeply and diligently for the truth as today, the truth in economic as well as moral realms.

Back-to-the-Soil Colonies.

[Cleveland Plain Dealer.]

One difficulty with the back-to-the-farm movement, though perhaps not its chief one, is that those whom it is designed particularly to benefit lack a working plan. They do not know how to go at it. Even assuming that a city man wants to go back to the soil and become a producer, how shall he go about it?

This question is answered by the Natonal Farm Homes Association, of which Governor Hadley, of Missouri, is president. Hadley has become one of the foremost of the back-to-the-farm agitators. Perhaps his organization is thinking primarily of the development of Missouri and the Southwest; yet could its plan be carried out its benefits would extend far beyond that.

Hadley and his associates propose to establish in sections of the Southwest where land is cheap, colonies each of 32 familes. Each family is to have 40 acres and in the center of the group of 40-acre farms will be a central farm of 160 acres to belong to the organization and be operated as a model for the rest. Not one cent of capital will be necessary for one to take advantage of this opportunity to get back to the soil. Each farmer will be given 10 years to pay for his plot of ground, which, fully equipped with buildings and machinery, will be furnished him by the association. For the city man, to whom farming is a mysterious art, the central model farm will be ready always to suggest methods and indicate results.

County Teachers Win.

In the case of the County Commissioners of Worcester County against the Board of County School Commissioners of Worcester County, the Court of Appeals, in an opinion delivered by Judge Urner, discussed another of the numerous cases arising under Section 29 of Article 3, of the State Constitution, which provides that "every law enacted by the General Assemply shall embrace but one subject, and that shall be described in its title"

The action in controversy provides increased pay for public school teachers, according to length of service. Other provisions in the act provide for an appropriation for the purchase of text books, arranged for a commercial course and permit graduates of colleges to teach in public schools without an examination. It is insisted that the title is misleading, inasmuch as the purpose to provide an increase in salaries is not set out. The county commissioners, therefore, refused to provide for the increase by making the necessary levies.

The opinion holds that all of the sections of the act are germane to the subject matter set out in the title, and that a portion of the title which does not include the section in controversy is merely descriptive and ancilliary. There being nothing in the act distinctly foreign to the description set out in the title, the act is held to be free from constitutional objections. The Court of Appeals, therefore, directs that the mandamus against the county commissioners to compel them to levy for the purposes of the Act must lie.

Large and Small Families.

[Minneapolis Star.]

Where the population is largely agricultural and isolated, and where labor is scarce, the husbandman is proud to raise a large family, for the boys in time will help to lift the labor from his shoulders, and also there is always plenty of work for the girls to do about the farm. Moreover, food is plentiful and other desires are few. But no such stimulus for a large family exists in urban life, where it is often necessary to live in a flat, the very limitations of which point to the inadvisability of a numerous progeny. Moreover as the individual rises in the social scale former desires become present needs.

The coming of numerous children would mean the sacrifice of these needs by the parents, the descent to a lower standard of living, and the parents will not consent.

Finally science has shown that a small family well taken care of makes a better showing in future generations than a large family poorly looked after. The fewer children of the well provided-for family will actually show a more numerous progeny in the third generation than will the underfed and neglected children of the larger family. Eugenics is a big question, and a conscientious investigation of it will convince any one that dogmatic assertion in that field is a hazardous performance. It is a general rule in biology that species with the most numerous offspring are those that bring fewest perfect and efficient individuals to maturity.
