Man Puts Foot in It

PUTS BOTH FEET IN!

INTO HALF HOSE AT 9C PAIR, 6 PAIRS FOR 50C,

that he has heretofore paid 15c to 25c for, and they are worth it. Nothing wrong with these goods that causes the reduction. In fact, there is no reduction with us. We bought the lot from Johnson, Boyd & Co., their sample line, about 100 dozen, the loss is not ours. Our buyer snapped them as soon as offered. So will you when you see them. Mostly plain Blacks, fast of course, some fancies and some lace effects, all are half price or less. See Window display.

Sale opens 8 A. M., Saturday.

9C PAIR, 6 PAIRS FOR 50C.

HOT WEATHER.

—BY—

Hot weather? Yes, but really not
Compared with weather twice as hot.
Find comfort, then, in arguing thus.
And you'll pull through victorious:
For instance, while you gasp and pant
And try to cool yourself—and can't—
With soda, cream and lemonade,
The heat at 90 in the shade—
Just calmly sit and ponder o'er
These same degrees, with 90 more
On top of them, and so concede
The weather now is cool indeed!

—James Whitcomb Riley.

For the Sentinel.

IMPRESSIONS OF A FIRST VISIT TO MT. TOM, MASS.

While the impressions are freshly imprinted upon my memory, I will relate them, in the hope that any one contemplating a trip to Massachusetts may avail themselves of the opportunity of visiting this wonderful mountain. Having to spend the night in Holyoke, commonly termed the "paper" city, by virtue of the numerous paper industries centered here, I looked around me for some avenue of escape from the oppressive heat of the city, and remembering that at all the places, however small, I had yet visited on my tour through New England, I had found that the electric railway companies, with universal Yankee characteristic of gain, had laid out parks accessible only by the use of their car lines, from which they reaped a rich harvest. I inquired if there were not a park near, and was informed that there was one fifteen minutes ride from Holyoke, called Mountain Park by virtue of its high elevation. I boarded a car, the line of which, by the way, has been boycotted by reason of the company's failure to accede to the unreasonable demands of the Firemen's Union to either force two of their firemen to join the union or else dismiss them. In consequence none of the laboring men, their families or their sympathizers patronize that particular line, but as all the car lines leading to, and going from Holyoke are managed and controlled by the same system, the boycott is productive of no practical result or benefit to them; they are, figuratively speaking, placed between his satanic majesty and the deep sea. In consequence of this labor disturbance, I had a car literally to myself all the way to the park. On my way there I espied, looming up in the distance, a giganic link to some mountainous range, rearing its lofty crest far above the surrounding expanse of low land, and perched upon it, standing out in bold relief against the background of sky and cloud, like some lone sentinel at his post, was the Summit House, so illuminated by hundreds of incandescent lights that at first glance one thought that its lofty dome had penetrated the heavens and the lights were the stars. I was at once imbued with an insatiable desire to reach there, so after meandering around Mountain Park and viewing the points of interest with which the place abounds, I took a transfer car to the foot of the mountain. To reach the mountain you are conveyed thither by means of a car drawn up the mountain's side by cable. The ascent is almost perpendicular, and, for the comfort of the passengers, the cars are specially constructed on an angle of 45 degrees, and even then one has the sensation of toppling over backwards as it ascends. From the base to the apex it is, I should say, approximately, about a mile and a half. When you have reached the top you are 1800 feet above the level of the sea. It is but a short walk from the car terminus to the Summit House. Seated upon its broad verandas the the myriad arc and incandescent lights of the adjacent towns and cities appeared like scintillating fireflies. I had not been seated there long enjoying the delightful breezes when I changed the range of vision to the westward where I was given the treat of viewing a passing thunder storm following the horizon. The dull and mighty roll and peal of Jupiter's thunder bolts, interspersed with zig-zag bolts of lightning cleaving the dense and surcharged clouds, was wafted to my ears like the cannonading of heavy artillery in action, and it only needed the groans of the mutilated and dying to give realism to the scene. The flashes of lightning would illuminate the heavens as far as the vision could discern, like some mammoth searchlight in play, then Egyptian darkness would follow in its wake obscuring everything. Æolus had unchained his winds and they were disporting themselves in mad revel. It blew a perfect gale, and chairs upon the verandas were toppled over and embarrassment and consternation reigned supreme among the girls and women by reason of their skirts, desire to take the place of their hats. It would take the mind of an Angelo to give true tone and color to that grand, but awful picture of the storm, amid its surroundings, as viewed from my coign of vantage. My pen, like faint praise, would only be damning. To have appreciated it to its fullness one would have to have been present, then I doubt if the impressions created would have found adequate utterance. No one with the slightest religious proclivities could do aught but acknowledge the omipotence and omnipresence of the Creator.

The hotel, strictly speaking, is not what is commonly designated as a hotel, for there are no lodging accommodations for the guests. It is termed a Casino. It is five stories high, with a tall dome perched upon its roof. The first floor is devoted to light lunches and refreshments, which are not so light. The second floor is converted into a theatre, where is held light operas and vaudeville shows. Being Sunday, the Puritanic laws of the State precluded any shows, but the kinetoscope was in full swing. It is well worth a trip to Massachusetts just to see Mt. Tom, for any one with appreciation for the beauties and grandeurs of nature, as here offered, would be amply repaid for the journey.
