MARYLAND MAN TAKES HONORS GRADUATES AT HEAD OF NAVY'S DEEP SEA DIVING CLASS

Adventurous work 300 feet under surface, standing at the head of his class of twenty-seven men Arthur P. Mayfield, a Maryland man, recently graduated from the Navy's deep sea diving class at Newport, R. I.

"It's a great institution, that school," said young Mayfield, "and in establishing it the United States Navy has set the whole world an example." Two hundred feet has heretofore been considered the maximum depth, except for a few edventurers and expert divers. This school was established to train men to dive to three hundred feet as Naval work requires diving to greater depths than heretofore thought possible."

"Let me tell you how the experience seems at first: When they let you down from the side of a boat into deep water, the first impression is like going out of a brilliantly lighted room into a dark one, for your eyes are slow in getting accustomed to the gloom. After a while you begin to see the phosphorus in the water, and that helps a bit, and later, when you are used to the difference, you find that you can see things dimly by means of the light that has filtered down from above. However, that is not enough to work by. You take an electric light for that purpose

By the time you get down around ninety feet the oxygen, supplied through your air hose, gets in its work, and you feel wonderfully exhilarated—it's almost like having a jag on. You descend gradually, and the feeling of exhilaration wears off a bit, and then you begin to realize the dangers around you.

There are all kinds of dangers. First, there is the danger of carbon dioxide poisoning, which hits a man if he doesn't regulate his air supply properly and breathes vitiated air over again. It's just like being in a closed room without any ventilation. The air pressure is regulated to some extent from above—a diver's supply is increased at the rate of one atmosphere, or 14.7 pounds for every 33 feet he descnds—but you have got to do most of the regulating yourself by means of the valve in your diving suit. Then, at great depths, when the pressure is half a dozen or more atmospheres, there is danger from oxygen poisoning, and this is extremely hard to overcome.

Contrary to the general belief, there is little danger from the sharks or other big dwellers down in the deep water, for they are afraid of divers. You see, the air rushes out of the diver's suit with a shrill, whistling sound; he carries an electric light, and his looks are enough to frighten off worse things than sharks.

A diver stays down from 20 to 25 minutes, on average. It would be dangerous to stay down too long, for, in addition to the chance of being poisoned, there is the cold to be reckoned with, to say nothing of the tremendous pressure."

Mayfield said that a bill had been introduced in Congress to make divers members of a separate department of the Navy and give them substantial pay.

DEATH OF T. HERBERT SHRIVER

A LONG AND USEFUL CAREER

Thomas Herbert Shriver who had been in failing health for several years, died at his home, at Union Mills, this cunty, December 31, 1916, at 11.15 P. M. Mr. Shriver was for many years a prominent figure in the religious, political and business life of the state. Behind him is a long line of ancestors, comprising one of the largest and strongest families of German descent in this country. The original name was Schreiber, and the family traces its history back to 1206. The Maryland family derives its descent in unbroken line from Lorenz and Margarete Schreiber, who were natives of Alsenborn Electorate Palatine, Oberamt, Germany, both of whom died in 1684. About a hundred years after the death of Lorenz Schreiber, the name was Americanized to Shriver.

The family has been identified with Carroll county for 150 years. Andrew Shriver, the grandfather of T. H. Shriver, was born November 7, 1762, on Little Pipe Creek, about three miles from Westminster, and was one of nine children of David and Rebecca (Ferree) Shriver.

The remains of both Andrew and David Shriver, with those of their wives, lie buried in the family graveyard on the farm of the late Augustus Shriver, Avondale, Carroll county.

The father of Mr. Shriver was William Shriver, who was born at Union Mills, December 23, 1797, and his mother was Mary M. J. Shriver, who before her marriage, was Mary M. J. Owings, of Littlestown, Pa. He continued the milling business established by his father at Union Mills.

T. Herbert Shriver was born February 19, 1846. Educated in the local schools, he was preparing for college when the war broke out and on June 28, 1863 when Stuart's Cavalry passed through this section on its way to Gettysburg, he joined that body, and participated in the battle and also took part in a number of cavalry engagements in Northern Virginia. Because of his youth, being only 17 years old, he was detailed to the Virginia Military Academy, and was a member of the famous cadet corps of that institution at the battle of Newmarket, Va. Having surrendered on May 15, 1865, he went to Baltimore and took up commercial life.

In 1882 he received his diploma from the Virginia Military Institute, conferred on all cadets who had participated in the Newmarket battle. For several years he was engaged in business as a traveling salesman, and later as proprietor of large farming, milling and banking interests. He and his brother, Benjamin F. Shriver, were the chief members of the B. F. Shriver Co., conducting the great chain of factories for canning fruits and vegetables. Since 1904 he had been the president of the company.

In politics he was a Democrat, and was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in 1908. He served as a member of the Maryland House of Delegates in 1878 and 1880, and was elected state senator in 1884. In 1898 he became the deputy collector of the port of Baltimore, and has been frequently spoken of as a possible candidate of his party for governor. He derives his title of general from having served on the staffs of Governors Lloyd and Jackson. He was for a long time one of the directors of the Democratic Advocate Publishing Company, of this city, and more recently vice president of the Westminster Deposit and Trust Company, and president of the Westminster Hardware Company. He was the leadng spirit in the establishment of the Union Mills Savings Bank of which he was president for a number of years and which has grown to be one of the strongest financial institutions in the county.

He was a member of St. John's Catholic Church, this city. His great love, reverence and admiration for Cardinal Gibbons has been a marked characteristic of his life, and it is a well-known fact that it was to the Shriver homestead, at Union Mills, the Cardinal always turned when he sought rest and retreat, and that there for many years he spent the anniversaries of his birth. He was an active member of the Knights of Columbus.

He was married, February 16, 1880, to Miss Elizabeth R. Lawson, who died some years ago, [illegible] following children: Mrs. [illegible] Shriver, Joseph N. Shriver, [illegible] liam H. Shriver of this [illegible] Robert T. Shriver of Union [illegible] and three brothers and two [illegible] as follows: C. Columbus Shriver [illegible] Mark O. Shriver, Sr., of Baltimore, B. Frank Shriver and Miss Mary [illegible] Shriver, of Union Mills, and Miss Emma (Sister Frances De Sales [illegible] Shriver) of Troy, N. Y.

The funeral took place Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock from St. John's Catholic Church. The service was conducted by Cardinal Gibbons. Burial was in St. John's Cemetery The music was furnished by the Cathedrial choir of Baltimore. The pallbearers were his three sons (Joseph N. Shriver, Robert T. Shriver and William H. Shriver), his son-in-law (Robert S. Shriver) and two nephews (Bernard F. and James McS. Shriver).

A number of priests attended the funeral, among whom was Rev. Father J. H. Cassidy, former pastor of St. John's Church, this city.

Frank C. Sharrer was the funeral director.
