THOUGHTS SUGGESTED BY ARBOR DAY

The war, we know has brought marvelous changes, and in more ways, too, than an altered map of Europe. Vast numbers of people—not confined to those who got over to France either—have been affected by it in their actual physical lives some permanently; while almost everyone—at least those who think—find themselves more or less changed in their mental attitude toward many abstract questions.

Not only have we altered some of our view points, but we have also taken on some new ways, and we have dropped some of our old ones, for good; and while many have been bettered by these changes, we know all too well, that in every section of the country, others have been pathetically afflicted through altered conditions of living.

Some happenings though rather have been amusing. One Baltimore club man, for instance, finding that his health became suddenly improved during the period of sugar rationing, is now putting a pinch only of sugar in his coffee, instead of the two or three heaping spoonsful with which he was in the habit of dosing his breakfast beverage prior to 1917, and as a well known expert on stomach troubles a man of world renown—when being accused of prescribing diet for others which he would not follow himself, replied "I do not have to diet, for it has been my habit of years never to touch sweets" (than which no argument could be more eloquent, considering the source and also the fact that he, though a man of fifty-five, is in superb physical condition) a few more of us might do well to continue the lesson of self control learned during the war.

A noted philosopher on war themes insists that the sum total of benefit to the human family resulting from war, offsets all its hororrs and loss. Now this is surely a repugnant doctrine to the majority, and one which offends our sensibility—our ideals as well as our reason. However, we do know that one great and vital gain has come through war and that is a fresher comprehension nof the meaning of that word: Conservation.

This world war has surely caused to spring into being throughout the world a more unanimous desire than ever before observed, to put on to a permanent basis the laws concerning the conservation of all the natural resources of the world. And not in regard to the smaller savings alone, such as of food, through the domestic and public kitchens of immense importance though they be-but of the great underlying basic world supplies, such as coal and other minerals, and the forests of all lands.

And as to-day is Arbor Day a day set aside most sagaciously, in order that we may be reminded of our pressing duty to trees, let us speak of them just a moment.

Forests, we know, are of such fundamental requirement to the world, (and their various ways of ministering to us total a sum too stupendous to enumerate) that suppose we consider them in their relation to war, alone.

America stands, to-day far poorer in regard to her timber on hand than she was two years ago; and in addition, there have been thousands of our foresters who have left this country during this time, not only to help fight our battles "over there", but also to aid in the reforestation necessary in Belgium, France and even England. This, as can readily be seen, leaves America, for a time, really feeble along forestry lines. and when we are assured, by authorative sources, that it was without doubt the hindering forests of France that prevented the Germans from passing, as speedly as they otherwise would, a certain well known position it is not an exaggeration to say that those beautiful woods in France really did much to save Paris. The moral, for us is easy—where have we any great forests adjacent to any of our big cities that would be a deliment to an invading army? Great Britain has mapped out a forestry progamme for herself that may well make America become a little more thoughtful than she ever has been on this question. She is planning to set out 5,000,000 acres in trees, at a cost of $75,000,000 dollars, in the ten years beginning with the signing of the Armistice and thew are also creating a legislation that will drastically control the abuse of trees. America is slow in the appreciation, but she is improving in this regard, particularly since the war. Then let Carroll county help her. Mrs. Austin Gallagher, Vice-President, Maryland Forestry.

IT IS NOW COLONEL WEANT

Governor Harrington's appointment of former State's Attorney Edward O. Weant, of Carroll, as a colonel on his stall to succeed the late State Senator Richard A. Johnson, of Howard, will be commended by all the friends of the brilliant and popular Westminster lawyer.

"Ned" Weant is a power in his community, one of the most sturdy, dependable and capable citizens of Carroll. His rank at the bar has been deservedly high since the beginning of his career. A lawyer of solid attainments, and a forceful speaker, he has come to occupy a conspicuous place in this circuit and throughout northern Maryland. His attractive personality and sureness of principal and unshakable moral fiber are familiar to every man, woman and child in Carroll and widely known outside his own immediate community.

Under Governor Harrington staff colonel has been something more than an empty title, and Colonel Weant joins a goodly company. In some furture day he may be naming colonels himself—and he will be eminently worthy to be commander-in-chief, The Evening Advertiser, Annapolis, Md.

MEN AND WOMEN OF CARROLL COUNTY BOOSTING FARM ORGANIZATION

A very enthusiastic meeting of representatives farmers and women of the county was held in the County Agent's office in Times Building, Saturday morning and afternonon. The meeting was called by the County Agent and Home Demonstration Agent for the purposes of forming an Advisory Council to discuss and plan work in farm and home projects. An all days meeting was held and lunch was served at noon. Mr. and Mrs. Hauver, County Agent and Home Demonstration Agent of Frederick County, were present. Mr. Hauver gave an outline of organization and work which their Advisory Council had accomplished. Mrs. Hauver told of work of the community shows, especially the mid-winter exhibit which was considered the best in Maryland. Some said it rivaled Maryland week in Baltimore.

During the meeting a telegram from Prof. Bomberger of Maryland State College, was received saying that he was delayed thirty hours by a storm on the bay. County Agent Fuller outlined the plan of work which is, to have every organization and community in the county represented on this council to help shape the policies of the work for the coming year. Over forty men and women were present and many took part in a discussion which followed. The committee consisted of representatives from granges, farm organizations and local clubs. It is expected that such an organization will do much to further the interests of Carroll County and to increase the effectiveness of the County Agents. Carroll County has needed such an organization which will unify the county work and give to the men and women of the county an opportunity to help shape the Agricultural policies and advertise the county among the others in the state. Her opportunities are as great if not greater than any other county in Maryland. Let us get to work and boost Carroll.

As many of the men were interested in the dairymen's meeting they left early in the afternoon. Then the women took charge and organized the Woman's Branch of the Advisory Council. Mrs. Peltz was elected president, Mrs. Beacham, vice-president and Mrs. Walsh, secretary. After presenting a brief plan of the work, two important projects were brought up for discussion. The first was a curb market and a committee of both town and rural women was appointed to get the census of opinion of the women in the city as well as truck gardeners and local farmers. Another question presented was the desirability of having Woman's Day at the County Agricultural Fair at Taneytown. Plans and suggestions were given in regard to increasing interest in woman's work. Plans will be given out later in regard to this.
