AT PRIVATE SALE.

A Desirable and Valuable Farm in New Windsor District, Carroll County, Md.

The undersigned will sell her farm, owned by the late Bradford H. Greenwood, and containing

130 ACRES OF LAND, more or less,

at Private Sale. 8 acres of the farm is in good Timber. This farm is situate near Jos. T. Stem's Store, Dennings, at the intersection of the Westminster and the Old Liberty roads, adjoining the lands of Thomas S. Jones, William Eckert, Jos. T. Stem, and others. The farm is eligibly located, is in a high state of cultivation, and is convenient to stores, schools and churches. The improvements consist of a substantial and commodious Brick Dwelling House, (suitable for two families), with water at the door, a large Bank Barn, and Wind Wheel with power sufficient to run Grist Mill and also pump water; Wagon Shed, Corn Crib, and all necessary outbuildings, all in good repair.

Altogether it is one of the most desirable farms in that section and is worthy the consideration of the careful buyer.

For further information, terms and conditions, apply to

MRS. LILLIE GREENWOOD,

on the place, or to The Geo. W. Albaugh Real Estate and Brokerage Company, Westminster, Md.

P. S.—If the above farm is not sold by December 1st, 1906, the same will be for rent on shares. oct 26 3t

IN SCHOOL DAYS.

—o—

Still sits the schoolhouse by the road,
A ragged beggar sunning;
Around it still the sumachs grow,
And blackberry vines are running.

Within, the master's desk is seen,
Deep scarred by raps official;
The warping floor, the battered seats,
The jackknife's carved initial.

The charcoal frescoes on its wall;
Its door's worn sill, betraying
The feet that, creeping slow to school,
Went storming out to playing!

Long years ago a winter sun
Shone over it at setting;
Lit up its western window panes
And low eaves' icy fretting.

It touched the tangled golden curls,
And brown eyes full of greeting,
Of one who still her steps delayed
When all the school were leaving.

For near her stood the little boy
Her childish favor singled;
His cap pulled low upon a face
Where pride and shame were mingled.

Pushing with restless feet the snow
To right and left he lingered—
As restless by her tiny hands
The blue-checked apron fingered.

He saw her lift her eyes; he felt
The soft hand's light caressing,
And heard the tremble of her voice,
As if a fault confessing.

"I'm sorry that I spelled the word;
I hate to go above you,
Because!"—the brown eyes lower fell—
"Because, you see, I love you!"

Still memory to a gray-haired man
That sweet child face is showing,
Dear girl! the grasses on her grave
Have forty years been growing!

He lives to learn, in life's hard school,
How few who pass above him
Lament their triumph and his loss,
Like her—because they love him.

—J. G. Whittier.

The Girl at the Gate.

—:o:—

BY L. M. MONTGOMERY.

From the National Magazine.

Something very strange happened the night old Mr. Lawrence died. I have never been able to explain it and I have never spoken of it except to one person and she said that I dreamed it . . . . . I saw and heard, waking.

We had not expected Mr. Lawrence to die then. He did not seem very ill . . . . not nearly so ill as he had been during the previous attack. When we heard of his illness I went over to Woodlands to see him, for I had always been a great favorite with with him. The big house was quiet, the servants going about their work as usual, without any appearance of excitement. I was told that I could not see Mr. Lawrence for a little while, as the doctor was with him. Mrs. Yaets, the housekeeper, said the attack was not serious and asked me to wait in the blue parlor; but I preferred to sit down on the steps of the big arched front door. It was an evening in June. Woodlands was very lovely; to my right was the garden and before me was a little valley abrim with the sunset. In places under the big trees it was quite dark even then.

There was something unusually still in the evening . . . . a stillness as of waiting. It set me thinking of the last time Mr. Lawrence had been ill . . . . nearly a year ago in August. One night during his convalescence I had watched by him to relieve the nurse. He had been sleepless and talkative, telling me many things about his life. Finally he told me of Margaret.

I knew a little about her . . . that she had been his sweethart and had died very young. Mr. Lawrence had remained true to her memory every since, but I had never heard him speak of her before.

'She was very beautiful,' he said dreamily, 'and she was only eighteen when she died, Jeanette. She had wonderful pale golden hair and dark brown eyes. I have a little ivory miniature of her. When I die it is to be given to you, Jeanette. I have waited a long while for her. You know she promised she would come.'

I did not understand his meaning and kept silent, thinking that he might wander a little in his mind.

'She promised me she would come and she will keep her word,' he went on.

'I was with her when she died. I had held her in my arms. She said to me, 'Herbert, I promise that I will be true to you forever, through as many years of lonely heaven as I must know before you come. And when your time is at hand I will come to make your death bed easy as you have mine. I will come, Herbert.' She solemnly promised Jeanete. We made a death-tryst of it. And I know she will come.'

He had fallen asleep then and after his recovery he had not alluded to the matter again. I had forgotten it but I recalled it now as I sat on the steps among the geraniums that June evening. I liked to think of Margaret . . . the lovely girl who had died so long ago, taking her lover's heart with her to the grave. She had been a sister to my grandfather and people told me I resembled her slightly. Perhaps that is why old Mr. Lawrence had always made such a pet of me.

Presently the doctor came out and nodded to me cheerily. I asked him how Mr. Lawrence was.

'Better . . . . better,' he said briskly. 'He will be all right tomorrow. The attack was very slight. Yes of course you may go in. Don't stay longer than half an hour.'

Mrs. Stewart, Mr. Lawence's sister, was in the sick-room when I went in. She took advantage of my presence to lie down on the sofa a little while, for she had been up all the preceding night. Mr. Lawrence turned his fine old silver head on the pillow and smiled a greeting. He was a very handsome old man; neither age nor illness had marred his finely modelled face or impaired the flash of his keen, steel-blue eyes. He seemed quite well and talked naturally and easily of many commonplace things.

At the end of the doctor's half-hour I rose to go. Mrs. Stewart had fallen asleep and he would not let me wake her, saying he needed nothing and felt like sleeping himself. I promised to come up again on the morrow and went out.

It was dark in the hall, where no lamp had been lghted, but outside, on the lawn the monlight was bright as day. It was the clearest, whitest night I ever saw. I turned aside into the garden, meaning to cross it, and take a short way over the west meadow home. There was a long walk of rosebushes leading across the garden to a little gate on the further side . . the way Mr. Lawrence had been want to take long ago when he went over the fields to woo Margaret. I went along it enjoying the night. The bushes were white with roses and the ground under my feet was all snowed over with their petals.

The air was still and breezeless; again I felt that sensation of waiting . . . of expectancy. As I came up to the little gate I saw a young girl standing on the other side of it. She stood in the full moonlight and I saw her distinctly.

She was tall and slight and her head was bare. I saw that her hair was a pale gold, shining somewhat strangely about her head as if catching the moonbeams. Her face was lovely and her eyes large and dark. She was dressed in something white and softly shimmering and in her hand she held a white rose . . . a very large and perfect one. Even at the time I found myself wondering where she could have picked it. It was not a Woodlands rose. All the Woodlands roses were smaller and less double.

She was a stranger to me, yet I felt that I had seen her or something very like her before. Possibly she was one of Mr. Lawrence's many nieces who might have come up to Woodlands upon hearing of his illness.

As I opened the gate I felt an odd chill of positive fear. Then she smiled as if I had spoken my thought.

'Do not be frightened,' she said. 'There is no reason you should be frightened. I have only come to keep a tryst.'

The words reminded me of something, but I could not recall what it was. The strange fear that was on me deepened. I could not speak.

She came through the gateway and stood for a moment at my side.

'It is strange that you should have seen me,' she said, 'but now behold how strong and beautiful a thing is faithful love, strong enough to conquer death. We who have loved truly love always—and this makes our heaven.'

She walked on after she had spoken, down the long rosepath. I watched her until she had reached the house and went up the steps. In truth I thought the girl was someone not quite in her right mind. When I reached home I did not speak of the matter to any one, not even to inquire who the girl might possibly be. There seemed to be something in that strange meeting that demanded my silence.

The next morning word came that old Mr. Lawrence was dead. When I hurried down to Woodlands I found all in confusion, but Mrs. Yates took me into the blue parlor and told me what little there was to tell.

'He must have died soon after you left him, Miss Jeanette,' she sobbed, 'for Mrs. Stewart wakened at ten o'clock and he was gone. He lay there smiling, with such a strange look on his face as if he had just seen something that made him wonderfully happy. I never saw such a look on a dead face before.'

'Who is here besides Mrs. Stewart?' I asked.

'Nobody,' said Mrs. Yates. 'We have sent word to all his friends but they have not had time to arrive.'

'I met a young girl in the garden last night.' I said slowly. 'She came into the house. I did not know her but I thought she must be a relative of Mr, Lawrence's.'

Mrs. Yates shook her head.

'No. It must have been someone from the village, although I didn't know of anyone calling after you went away.'

I said nothing more to her about it.

After the funeral Mrs. Stewart gave me Margaret's miniature. I had never seen it or any picture of Margaret's before. The face was very lovely—also strangely like my own, although I am not beautiful. It was the face of the young girl I had met at the gate.

In 23 States a Governor and other State officers (in 20 of them also, a Legislature); in 10, minor State officers or Justices of the Supreme Court; in 2, Congressmen and a Legislature, and in 7, Congressmen only are to be elected. Oklahoma is to vote on a State Constitution, and Arizona and New Mexica on joint Statehood.

The terms of 30 United States Senators—15 Democrats and 15 Republicans—expire March 3, 1907. Virginia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Kentucky and Arkansas have already selected Democrats, and Georgia has a Legislature which will elect another, while Maine and Oregon have Legislatures which insure the return of Republicans. Of the 22 States in which is to be chosen November 6 a Legislature that will elect United States Senators, 14 are now represented in the Senate by Republicans and 8 by Democrats.

A national House of Representatives is to be elected—the Sixtieth Congress—with 386 members. The present House is composed of 250 Republicans and 136 Democrats. Maine has already elected 4 Republicans, Oregon 2 and Vermont 2.

There is fusion in only one State—Nebraska—where the Democrats and Populists agreed upon a division of the state nominations, though in several other States the Republican or Democratic candidates for State offices have been nominated or endorsed by one or more of the minor parties.

As usual, there is one State ticket—the Democratic—in South Carolina. Pennsylvania leads this year with the greatest number of State tickets—12. Parties are numerous, those having tickets in the field being Independence League, Citizens', Commonwealth, City, Referendum, Jefferson, American, Anti-Administration Republican, Reorganized Republican and Lincoln Republican. Six of them, however, are confined to Philndelphia.

The Socialists have tickets in 25 States, the Prohibitionists in 23, Socialist Labor in 7, Populists or People's in 4 and the Independence League in 3, while "Public Ownership" has a ticket in 1 State.

The number of tickets in the different States is; One, South Carolina; 2, Alabama, Florida, North Carolina, Tennessee, Washington; 3, Delaware, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, Rhode Island, Utah; 4, Conneticut, Colorado, Idaho, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, South Dakota, Wisconsin, Wyoming; 5, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, New York, Ohio; 6, Indiana, Massachusetts, Texas; 7, California; 12, Pennsylvania.

The Socialists have tickets in California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

The Prohibitionists have tickets in California, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Texas, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

The Socialist Labor has tickets in Illinois, Indiana, Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Texas.

The Populists or People's party men have tickets in California, Indiana, Iowa and Kansas.

The Independence League has tickets in California, Colorado, Massachusetts and New York.

Union Labor is represented in California, Pennsylvania; "Public ownership" in Minnesota, Anti-Administration Republican in Alabama and Reorganized Republican in Texas.

The Socialists and Prohibitionists have nominated candidates for Congress in many districts, and in others labor unions or federations have indorsed Democrats or Republicans who are believed to be favorable to their cause.

Buy Some Guineas.

In buying new poultry stock this fall don't overlook the fact that guinea fowls are both profitable and useful. For table use they have few superiors and their flesh has almost the same flavor as a prairie chicken. While their eggs are small, they have a delightful flavor and will find a ready sale. They are also valuable as guardians of the poultry house. At the slightest approach of danger they will set up a cry that will either frighten the intruder or bring help from the farm house.

It's pretty hard to be dishonest and good natured at the same time.
