WHEN YOU'RE DOWN.

What legions of "friends" always bless us
When golden success lights our way!
How they smile as they softly address us,
So cordial, good humored, and gay!
But ah! when the sun of prosperity
Hath set, then how quickly they frown,
And cry out in tones of severity,
"Kick the man, don't you see he's down!"

What though, when you knew not a sorrow,
Your heart was as open as day,
And your "friends" when they wanted to borrow,
You obliged, and ne'er asked them to "pay!"
What though not a soul you e'er slighted,
As you wandered about through the town,
Your "friends" become very near-sighted,
And don't seem to see when you're down.

When you're "up" you are loudly exalted,
And traders all sing out your praise;
When you're "down" you have greatly defaulted,
And they "really don't fancy your ways."
Your style was "tip-top" when you'd money,
So sings every sucker and clown,
But now 'tis exceedingly funny—
Things have altered "because you are down."

Oh, give me the heart that forever
Is free from this world's selfish rust,
And the soul whose high, noble endeavor
Is to raise fallen man from the dust:
And when in adversity's ocean
A victim is likely to drown,
All hail to the friend whose devotion
Will lift up a man when he's "down."

THE WORKINGMAN.

He is the noblest man of whom our free country can boast; whether at the workshop or at the plow, you find him the same noblehearted, free and independent being. And if there is a man in society upon whom we look with esteem and admiration, it is the independent, sober workingman. We care not whether he be farmer, mechanic or common laborer—whether his toils are endured in the workshop, the field, or the coal mine; whether his home is in the back woods or in the neat cottage—our admiration is the same. What a happy picture he presents; what a reward of labor, who by his unaided exertions, establishes for himself respectable position in society; who commencing in poverty, by his skill and assiduity, surmounts every obstacle, overcomes every prejudice, and finally succeeds in forming a character whose value is enhanced by those who come after him. Such a man we prize as the noblest work of which human nature is capable, the highest production she can boast. And let it be borne in mind by the young workingman just entering upon the stage of active life—let it ever lie at the foundation and be the moving spring of all its efforts—that this situation he must strain every nerve to attain. It can be obtained by all. Untiring industry and virtuous ambition never fail to find their reward. They never yet were exerted in vain and never will be while honesty and justice find a home in human breast. It was remarked by an eloquent writer "that the workingman who had no inheritance but virtue, is the sole king among men, and only man among kings."

"He envies not the sons of ease,
Nor lord in princely hall,
But bows before the wise decrees,
In kindness meant for all."

A BEAUTIFUL SENTIMENT.—Shortly before the departure of the lamented Heber for India, he preached a sermon which contained this beautiful extract:

"Life bears us on like the stream of a mighty river. Our boat at first glides down the narrow channel—through the playful murmurings of the little brook and the windings of its grassy borders. The trees shed their blossoms over our young heads, the flowers seem to offer themselves to the young hands; we are happy in hope, and grasp eagerly at the beauty around us—but the stream hurries on, and still our hands are empty. Our course in youth and manhood is along a wilder and deeper flood, amid objects more striking and magnificent. We are animated at the moving pictures and enjoyments and industry around us; we are excited at some short-lived disappointment. The streams bear us on, and our joys and griefs are alike left behind us. We may be shipwrecked, but we cannot be delayed; whether rough or smooth, the river hastens to its home, till the roar of the ocean is in our ears, and the tossing of the waves beneath our feet, and the floods are lifted up around us, and we take our leave of earth and its inhabitants, until of our future voyage there is no witness save the Infinite and Eternal."

OUT OF DANGER.—A hard-shell preacher wound up a flaming sermon with magnificent effusion. Hear him:

"My brethern and sistern, of a man's full of religion you can't hurt him. There were three African children; they put them in a fiery furnace, heated seven times hotter than it could be het, and it didn't swinge a hair on their heds. And there was John Evangler; they put him—where do you think they put him? Why they put him in a caldron of biling ile, and biled him all night and didn't faze his shell! And then there was Daniel; they put him in a lion's den and what, my fellow-travelers and respected authorities, do you thing he was put into a lion's den for? Why, for prayin' three times a day. Don't be alarmed, brethren and sistern; I don't think that any of you will ever get into a lion's den."

A Richmond paper records the desperate threat of a man there who declared he would have money if he had to work for it.

INSECTS FOR FOOD.

In some latitudes, insects are considered a great luxury. Rome has its snail market, as well as its fish and meat markets, and the historian says that in the most luxurious days of Rome, the tables of the banqueting halls were graced with dishes of fattened caterpillar grubs, of great lusciousness. In Northern Africa, wagon loads of locusts are brought into the cities to furnish their inhabitants with a very popular dish. They are preferred by the Moors to pigeons, who consider two or three hundred of them a moderate quantity for each person at the table. In other parts of Africa the white ants are the chosen luxuries for the table. They are parched in iron pots over a gentle fire, and then, without sauce, are served up as delicious food. A distinguished traveler says that he has often partaken of this dish, and thinks it delicate, nourishing, and wholesome, resembling in taste sugared cream or almond paste. And why should we sneer at the African for dining upon white ants? The Arab is as much disgusted with our use of the oyster as we can be with his parched locusts. The Chinaman dines on the chrysalis of the silk worm, and derides the Frenchman for his love of frog and snail soup. We glory in clam chowder, fried oysters, and roasted crabs, and profess a disgust for a distant people because their breakfast is made of roasted spiders.

How do we know but there may yet be found in the insect world greater luxuries for our tables than we have ever gathered from the treasures hid in the sands.—Indeed, an eminent entomologist has pronounced, upon his own authority, the large grasshopper to be excellent food; but he is in advance of his age in the boldness which few are yet ready to imitate. But we have followed that most daring man who first swallowed an oyster, and we honor him, whoever he may be, as a benefactor of his race for having introduced us to such a luxury.

A RICH LOVE STORY.

DEAR SWEET—Oh, my love of love, clarified honey of oil of citron, white loaf sugar of my hope and molasses of my expectation, you have been absent from me three whole days. The sun is dark at mid-day—the moon and stars are black when thou art absent.

Thy voice is the music of the sphere! and the wind of your gown when you pass by is a zephyr from the garden of paradise in the time of early flowers.

I kissed you when we last met, and my whole frame was filled with sweetness.—One of your curls touched me on the cheek, and that organ was transmuted into loaf sugar.

Oh, spice of spices—garden of delights, send me a lock of your hair—send me anything that your blessed fingers have touched, and I will go raving mad with ecstacy.

One look from thy bright eyes would transmute me incontinently into the third heaven! Your words are mother of pearl drooping from your mouth!

My brain in everlasting fire. The blood runs and schorches my veins and vitals as it passes through them.

When you do come, be sure and fetch that shilling you borrowed of me, as I want to buy some tobacco.

"SKOOL ROOLS."—The Ironton Register says that not many miles from that city, a young lady is teaching school, and sends the editor the following rules provided her by the trustees, for the government of the school:

No Swearin
"fitin
"quarelin
"nicknamin
"goin intu the water
"reslin and jumpin
"goin intu any persons vine-patches, or orchards without the consent of the owner
No pinchin
"stickin of pins intu each other
"pullin of hair durin books
"Courtin in school
Not more than one pupil must go out, at a time, unless for wood, or water.
No crackin of walnuts, unless dried.
"whisperin

Those rules must be observed, for a violation of those rules, will be punished with the lash, accordin to the virdic of the trustics.

LUCK AND LABOR.—Luck is ever waiting for something to turn up.

Labor, with keen eyes and strong will, turn something up.

Luck lies in bed, and wishes the post man would bring him news of a legacy.

Labor turns out at six o'clock, and, with busy pen or ringing hammer, lays a foundation of a competance.

Luck relies on chance.

Labor, on character.

Labor strides upward and onward to independence.

THE smallest rule we lay ourselves under a necessity of observing, is of great benefit, as it teaches us some part of the government of ourselves, as it keeps up tenderness of mind, as it presents God often to our thoughts, and brings a sense of our religion into the ordinary actions of our common life.

BECAUSE men desire to be more great than humble, they are suffered to become vain in their imaginations.
