Thursday, July 30, four young girls who escaped from the Montrose School for Girls, near Reisterstown tried to get to Union Bridge, this county, where the parents of one of the girls resided. By a lift given them by a passing auto they finally reached the home, but thoroughly drenched by rain. The next evening the girls met four men, Marshall Bell, Keymar; Joseph Whitmore, Middleburg, and Leroy Sheiffer, and William Stone, of Union Bridge, who accompanied them to Baltimore in a large truck owned by Bell, on the pretense of moving some furniture from Baltimore. Instead of getting the furniture the men took the girls to a piece of woodland beyond the limits of Baltimore and kept them there all night. One of the girls Miss Packam, escaped from the men and reported to the Northern Police Station, Baltimore, from whence she communicated with Miss Ellison, the superintendent of the home. When Miss Packam arrived at the home she told a clear story of the affair, which caused Sheriff Philips of this county to arrest the four men, who were held in $500 bail each for a hearing before Police Justice Hutchins. Later Whitmore, Sheiffer and Stone were each fined $10 and costs, which they paid, and Bell was fined $25 and costs, from which he prayed an appeal to the circuit court.
