PAYING FOR THE WAR

There is some controversy as to whether the United States should plan to finally extinguish its war debt at the present rate, or whether it should slow up a little on the payments, so as to give the taxpayers some relief. But however one may feel about this controversy, there is reason for great satisfaction at the remarkable success being achieved in paying off this debt.

During the presidential terms of Mr. Harding and Mr. Coolidge, the debt has been reduced at a rate twice as fast as the law requires. Actual

ATHLETICS AND SELF CONTROL

It was remarked by teachers concerning a certain player in a recent football game, that the experiences of this sport had been a wonderful training for him. When he first took it up, he was famous for his quick temper. But during the game some days ago, it was noted, a powerful slugger came up from the opposing team, and gave him a most vicious pounding over the head. But putting into effect the ideas of gentlemanly play which had been impressed on him, he just grinned and went on playing.

That fellow has learned something out of the game just as valuable as any lesson taught in books. Those of us here in Westminster who carp about the evils of athletics, should also see how it turns many rough and untrained fellows into self controlled gentlemen.

BACK YARDS

There are some folks who have energy enough to keep their front yards fairly well cleaned up, but they have the feeling that anything will go in their back yards. Consequently

THE RED CROSS ROLL-CALL

Great disasters and misfortunes are happening all the time. They may occur next in our own locality. When these big troubles occur, local agencies can not usually cope with them. When fires and floods and earthquakes take place, some well equipped agency must be ready to act in a minute, with money and supplies and workers ready for the job at the scene of disaster. This great service is nobly and efficiently performed by the American Red Cross.

Some of its more notable achievements have been the work of caring for the 900,000 suffering refugees in Greece, and their success in raising and expending over $11,000,000 for the Japanese earthquake sufferers. During the past year they rendered service in 90 serious or great disasters.

People are rather quick to respond to suffering when it occurs next door to them, but if it is in some distant state or foreign land, they have a more indifferent feeling. We should be too generous and broad minded to think that we can neglect this suffering, just because it is not located close to our homes.

POORLY KEPT HOMES

Most towns have some neighborhoods where houses are kept in a disorderly way, and are a discredit to the community. Some owners of rented houses claim their tenants would not keep these places in good shape if they were improved, so that they would spend money for nothing if they made such betterments.

Some people will complain of the bad condition of the house they occupy, but if it happens to be near the place where they work, they will put up with it rather than consent to walk a longer distance.

People would do well to insist on well kept homes. They would better walk a considerable distance, rather than dwell in disorderly quarters which must affect the morale of a family and bring the children up with imperfect ideas of neatness. As a general rule, if tentnts would keep a house in good order, landlords would improve such property. It does not pay to let a house acquire a shabby appearance.
