AMERICAN SENTINEL

WESTMINSTER, MARYLAND

Published Every Tuesday and Friday Afternoon By The American Sentinel Company of Westminster, Maryland

OFFICE:
MAIN AND LIBERTY STREETS

Entered at the Postoffice at Westminster, Md., as Second-class matter.

One of the first acts of Governor Wilson, after his inauguration, will be it is stated, a call for the proposed extra session of Congress, to revise the tariff, and thus, in the very beginning of his administration it will be confronted with a difficult and perplexing problem. If an attempt shall be made to carry into effect the avowed theory of the Democratic party that a tariff for protection is unconstitutional, it will meet with opposition from more than one, perhaps many, Democratic Congressmen and a violent protest from many Democratic sources. There are interests in this country that absolutely require protection if they are not to be destroyed, and the principle of protection, if conceded in one case, is applicable in all. Let the Democrats ignore it if they will and take the consequences.

Now, this is said without any purpose to throw suspicion upon the motives of Mr. Taft, or to question his sincerity in reaching the judgment upon which he based his veto. He is an able jurist, the bent of his mind being in that direction, and he without doubt, acted upon conscientious conviction. His splendid administration, to which reference is made in another article in these columns, will eventually be appreciated by the people, whatever may be their conception of it at the present time. While disagreeing with his action in vetoing the bills referred to the Sentinel has no sympathy with the intemperate abuse heaped upon him by some of those who resent his action.

Abusive criticism of a public official who without doubt acted from a conscientious conviction of duty, is not calculated to further the cause of which the critic is the exponent.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF WILLIAM H. TAFT

At noon today the administration of William Howard Taft as President of the United States came to its close. Its end was also the termination of sixteen wears of the supremacy of the Republican party in the office of Chief Executive, years of unequaled prosperity in the history of the country, this prosperity culminating and reaching its highest point during the Taft administration.

The only administration since the foundation of the government that has ever encountered more perplexing and important problems than that just closed was that of Abraham Lincoln. Many new and difficult questions have confronted the country and old legacies from previous administrations were handed down for consideration and, if possible, for determination and settlement. Among these the trust and monopoly problem has, of course, been the most important and has received more attention than that of any other, and it is but fair to the administration to say that it has done vastly more to curb and restrain these greedy cormorants than any one or all of its predecessors combined, so far as that can or could be legally accomplished. There were more prosecutions under existing laws and more convictions, for their violation than in all previous time.

Many valuable suggestions orginating with the President have claimed the attention of Congress and met with its concurrence. The conservation of important interests—agricultural, streams, forests, etc., has received greater attention than ever before. The vast area of coal land in Alaska, claimed by private parties, under doubtful grants, have been reclaimed and restored to the people. The rod held over Cuba has prevented serious insurrectionary outbreaks in the island republic and the prospect of a stable republican government is promising. The marvelous progress of the work on the Panama Canal, with the wonderful suppression of malarial disease, the provisions for the comfort and health of the laborers, has astonished the world. In fact, the achievements of the administration in many directions have been without a parallel.

With few exceptions all classes of the people have shared in the prosperity that has so signally marked the period, and few have ever lived more comfortably than during the four years ending today.

It is true that in some respects the cost of living has been high. Meats and some products of farms and trucks have cost more than usual, but in many things there has not been an excessive increase in prices and careful housekeepers have managed to provide food for their families without greatly increasing their expenditures. Labor of all kinds, skilled and unskilled, has never been better paid and the masses of the people have never been more prosperous. The high prices which have ruled in some products have been caused by that very prosperity. The people have had money and have spent it for luxuries as well as for things necessary. About the only people who have not shared in this general prosperity are those who have salaries that could not be increased.

Much more might be said in honest praise of the administration's achievements and their effect upon the welfare of the people, but lack of space forbids. That mistakes have been made goes without saying. Nobody claims infallibility for Mr. Taft. But the tendency has been to magnify these mistakes in the eyes of the people and to minimize the great things done by the administration. History will do it justice and future generations will learn that it was one of the most successful of all up to its termination.

TWO RECENT VETOES BY PRESIDENT TAFT

They Are to Be Regretted

It is deeply regretted by many sincere friends and admirers of President Taft that he saw fit, in the closing days of his administration, to veto two of the most important measures passed by Congress—the immigration bill and the bill to prohibit the shipment of alcholic liquors for illegal sale, from any state into another wherein the sale of such liquors is prohibited by law. His reasons for vetoing the immigration bill appear to have been sentimental and are not convincing to the minds of citizens who see clearly that the time has come when this country cannot absorb and assimilate many of the people of the classes now hastening to its shores. The recent growth of crimes of a heinous character is largely due to the influx of these classes, and more rigid rules for their exclusion, are necessary. The Senate passed the bill over the veto by an overwhelming majority, but it failed of passage in the House by a few votes less than the two-thirds required and hence did not become a law.

In relation to the anti-shipment liquor bill the veto was predicated upon constitutional reasons, President Taft holding it to be in violation of the constitution and not authorized by the provision which gives the General Government the right to regulate commerce between the States. It is not to be denied that there is reasonable ground for this opinion, but the President should not have assumed the authority to determine the question. The Supreme Court is the tribunal to which it should, and fortunately will, be referred, as the bill was passed over the veto by overwhelming majorities in both Senate and House and will be the law of the land, unless nullified by a decision of the Supreme Court to which the question will undoubtedly be carried. Should that decision be adverse to the measure some other method may be devised to protest anti-liquor territory against invasion from other States.

A quarter of a million of people, or more, representing all sections of the country are visiting Washington to witness the inauguration ceremonies and view the great inaugural parade.

HIGH SCHOOLS AS CENTERS OF INSTRUCTION IN AGRICULTURE

Letter received by Mrs. Francis King Carey, Chairman of the Milk Commttee, of the Women's Civic League, from Dr. Charles E. North, of New York.

New York City,
Feb. 21, 1913.

Mrs. Francis King Carey,
509 Cathedral street,
Baltimore, Md.

My dear Mrs. Carey:

I am writing to express to you my opinion of the Agricultural High School located at Sparks, Maryland, which I recently visited. I have been in the city of Baltimore a number of times, but have never heard any one of the citizens mention the existence of this High School. After having spent some houre inspecting the work being done there under the direction of the Principal, Mr. Crocheron, I feel that at its very gates the city of Baltimore has the solution of its entire milk problem and of the efficient production of its food products. Such work as Mr. Crocheron is conducting at this High School deserves the widest publicity possible. The fact that the news of this enterprise has not reached Baltimore or New York makes me feel as if I were an explorer who had discovered something of interest and of such value that I must forthwith announce my discovery to the citizens of Baltimore as well as to the rest of the people of the United States.

At this High School I found that the principal was employed in actually directing the entire work of the school toward equipping boys with the training which would best fit them for their life work as agriculturists and dairy farmers, and toward equipping girls with the training which would best fit them for their life work as the wives of the agriculturists and dairy farmers. Here is a school which has entirely abandoned the old-fashioned ideas of education for its own sake and has adopted a policy of giving instruction in those things which will be of most use for the kind of lives which the students in attendance are most likely to lead.

Only a small fraction of 1 per cent. of farmers' boys can find it possible to leave their homes and attend Agricultural College. The farmers' daughters have nowhere to go where they can learn and be thoroughly trained in those things which they need to know to make a success of their business as housekeepers. In this school instead of making the teaching of the practical things of rural life incidental and casual, they have been made the backbone of the entire course of instruction. Thus I found that the boys were being instructed in agriculture, gardening, carpenter work, the construction and use of machinery, surveying, horticulture, the judging of cattle and horses, besides the ordinary English branches. On the other hand the girls receive regular instruction in cooking, sewing, vegetable raising, the raising of chickens and general housekeeping, in addition to the ordinary English branches.

Most surprising of all to me was the discovery that both the boys and girls are thoroughly instructed in the keeping of accounts, the boys in keeping farm accounts and the girls in keeping household accounts. Bookkeeping of the farm has been so neglected in the United States that not one farmer out of one thousand can give a business man any definite profit and loss figures. The students in this Agricultural High School at Sparks are thoroughly drilled in keeping these cost accounts, and understand that they are to make a business of their life work.

Mr. Cocheron has also done a remarkable piece of work in developing this High School into a social centre. He has not only made the school instruction of interest to the boys and girls, but has developed its influence so that it includes their parents. Regular meetings are held at the school of adults, both men and women, to attend lecture courses and to be instructed in matters which are of primary interest to them. All of these things which are so strongly advocated by those interested in the establishment of civic entres have been done at the school, so that in the community which surrounds it it is an inspiration to both young and old.

I have called the attention of those interested in rural education in New York State, Massachusetts and Connecticut to the work which is being done in this school and have aroused such enthusiasm on their part that in at least two places arrangements are new being made for transforming old-style High Schools into Agricultural High Schools of this type. I personally feel that the transformation of the public schools in rural communities into agricultural schools is the surest method of increasing the efficiency of our producers and of making farm life so attractive that our farms will not be deprived of their best boys and girls, as they have been in the past.

It is too true that the majority of our public schools as at present conducted in rural communities are stepping stones to the city, since they do nothing to inspire a love and interest in rural life. This can all be checked by bringing about such a transformation as has occurred at Sparks.

I feel that Mr. Crocheron deserves the highest credit for the work he has done there, and hope that some way will be found for him to take part in a much larger work. I understand that his name has been mentioned for the Presidency of the Maryland Agricultural Colloge and there is also a suggestion of his taking a position in California. It seems to me that it would be a great loss to the State of Maryland to have Mr. Cocheron leave, and I sincerely hope that the work which he has done will be so well appreciated that he will receive the position of the President of the Maryland Agricultural College.

Very Sincerely yours,
(Signed) CHARLES E. NORTH.

THIRTY THOUSAND BEDS PROVIDED, TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND NEEDED

New York, Feb. 20th; Some comparisons showing the progress of the anti-tuberculosis campaign in the last eight years and the present needs of his movement are made by The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis in a brief report of its work issued today in connection with an appeal for further support.

During the eight years of its work, The National Association has assisted in the organization of over 800 state and local anti-tuberculosis societies located in almost every state and territory of the union. Over 500 hospitals and sanatoria have been established with more than 30,000 beds for consumptives. About 400 dispensaries with more than 1,000 physicians in attendance and at least 150 open air schols for tuberculous and anaemic children have also been provided. Laws dealing with tuberculosis have been passed in 45 states and ordinances on this subject have been adopted in over 200 cities and towns. An active field campaign of education against tuberculosis has been carried on in 40 states and territories by means of lectures, exhibits, the press, and the distribution of over 100,000,000 pamphlets on this disease.

Contrasted with this rapid progress which the anti-tuberculosis campaign has made. The National Association points out that at the present time there is still need for at least 100,000 hospital beds for indigent consumptives in the advanced stages of the disease who must be segregated if tuberculosis is to be kept from spreading. Another 100,000 beds in sanatoria for tuberculosis patients, who are in the early or curable stages of the disease are needed. In addition to this large bed provision, The National Assaciation affirms that visiting nurses, tuberculous clinics and opnn air schools should be established in almost every city and town of the United States. Furthermore, the present campaign contemplates the continuous aducation of practically the entire population of the United States amounting to 90,000,000 people, and the extension of the campaign of organization already in effect to take in every state, city and town of the country.
