J. Pierpont Morgan Great American Financier is Dead

J. Pierpont Morgan, of New York City, who ranked as the foremost financier in America, if not in the world, died at Rome, Italy, on Monday. He was born at Hartford, Conn., April 17, 1837, and was consequently a few days short of 76 years old. He was a son of well-to-do parents and began his financial career when quite a young man. It is a singular fact that, while he was the controlling power in organizations with nearly ten billions of dollars capital his estate is far below in value that of John D. Rockefeller and Andrew Carnegie. The estimate placed upon it is $135,000,000 of which $60,000,000 is in works of art, of which he had probably the greatest collection in the world. He was a lover of literature and art and was, himself, the author of poems, written in his younger years which are said to possess considerable merit.

He was a member of the Episcopal Church and one of the committee which prepared the present book of Common Prayer of that denomination, about twenty years ago. It is said that he frustrated the purposes of a trust or combine of publishers to control the sale of the book and demand for it exhorbitant prices. He did this by starting a printing plant which turned out all the copies necessary to meet the demand, many of which were given away, and the others sold at a small profit, which he gave to the Church.

His financial operations were constructive, not destructive. He promoted the building and development of railroads and, it is said, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad was saved from insolvency and sale by a loan made by him of $10,000,000. Other great leading roads of the country were financed and made successful under his control. He bought the Lake Shore road out-right and brought an end to its ruinous competion with another road.

He was, however, the prime mover in the organization of the great Steel Trust, and, as already said, it is remarkable that, through all these enterprises he did not acquire boundless wealth. From all this it can fairly be said he was not a bad man. He resorted to none of the methods of the Standard Oil Company in premeditation crushing weak and feeble industries or business enterprises. Some of the wealth he gained may be classed as predatory, but, on the whole he can fairly be set down as having been an honest man. He was, unquestionably, in his sphere, a great one.

It is to be placed to his credit that on two occasions he averted financial panics which would probably have impoverished many people of this country. The good he did, therefore, outweighs the evil, if there were, in any of his transactions.

He is survived by his wife, one daughter, Mrs. Herbert Satterlee, and one son, J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr., all of whom were with him when the end came.

In Police Justice Brown's Court during the past week several cases involving violations of the law have been tried and others are pending. One of the cases disposed of was that of Wm. H. K. Norkes, alias Washington Slim, who pleaded guilty to having been drunk and disorderly and was sentenced to the House of Correction for six months. Thereupon he prayed an appeal to the Circuit Court rather a singular proceeding after a plea of quilty. Another case was that of Gloyd Zentgraf, who pleaded guilty to the charge of assault and battery. The object of the attack was Mr. Theodore Crawford, an aged, quiet and peaceable citizen, who was badly beaten and has been suffering severely from his injuries.
