WHO WINS?

It is now a question whether the President won a victory for himself and the American people, or against the latter, on two votes in the House of Representatives on Friday last. The votes were, first, on a motion to end debate on the proposition to repeal the bill to accord American ships free tolls in passing through the Panama Canal, and secondly, to adopt a rule to preclude amendment of the bill under consideration. Both were pet proceedings of President Wilson and both were adopted by the House. Those who have been following the course of the administration in its effort to accomplish the repeal of free tolls to American shipping have not entertained much doubt of the President's victory, and it was probably something of a surprise to them, not to have been more fully informed on the subject, and that the victory was won, or practically won, in the House by a rather slender majority. The vote to end debate was 207 for and 176 against, and for the rule 200 to 172.

The repeal might practically be said to be a Democratic measure. It has been backed by the administration by all its power of effort and persuasion. It has had the unqualified approval of the thick and thin Wilson press of the country—the newspapers which sneeze when the President takes snuff, to use an old metaphor, and which could not see an error in any of his acts by the use of a searchlight. It has had the overwhelming power and influence of most of the prominent leaders of the Democratic great majority in the House, in active effort with the President, and Mr. William Jennings Bryan has gone to its support with all the influence of his high office, as, for the matter of that, have all the members of the Cabinet; yet it comes out of the first struggle with a scant 28 majority—not such a great majority after all, and not surely presaging a victory when it comes to the test in the Senate.

The lineup, so to speak, exhibited all the Republicans in the House, except eight, opposed to the repeal, and fifty-five Democrats—among whom was Speaker Champ Clark—was found voting on that side. It may fairly be inferred, therefore, that there are a good many Democrats among the rank and file of the party, who are not ready to see this magnificent work, for which the United States has expended nearly four hundred millions of dollars, carry no sign of advantage whatever to American shipping, because of some sentimental idea of American obligation to foreign nations on the part of the President. It is a fairly reasonable assumption that but for the influence of the Presidential office behind it, there would be a slender support for the repeal bill in Congress; that, in fact, the sympathies of the American people are against the repeal.

The fight for repeal may be regarded as practically won in the House of Representatives, but America is not to surrender its vantage ground without a prolonged and bitter struggle in the Senate. It remains to be seen whether Presidential influence will prove as potential in that body as it has in the House of Representatives. There are Senators always willing to bow down in subserviency to higher authority, either for favors or through sycophancy; but most Senators have a due regard for their own standing and a proper estimate of their high office to act without submission to a President who has shown a strong disposition to play the boss.

It is hardly the province of a small country newspaper to analyze and discuss very seriously the questions involved in a controversy of this character. But when the interests of the country are being upheld by as strong a body as that which voted in the House against the repeal of free tolls and so many of them also against the President chosen by a party convention of their own, it is about time for the people of the country to sit up and take notice. It is not surprising to find the Republicans in the House almost to a man on the side of American interests. That was to be expected and is characteristic of the adherents of the party. But it is more than gratifying to find so many of the enemy arraying themselves on the side of the country. Shall the President or the American people win in the controversy?

The repeal bill was forced to a vote and passed the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the vote for repeal having been 247 to 161. Of the Democrats 220 voted for it and 52 against it. The division in the Republican ranks was 25 for and 92 against repeal, and of the Progressive Republicans 2 for the repeal and 17 against it. It is to be regretted that the Republicans did not stand as a solid body against it, though they were not bound by party action to do so. The Democrats, however, were forced to ignore their party platform, which was repudiated by President Wilson. They were led, or perhaps driven, by him to kick that plank of the platform to pieces. According to Mr. Wilson this was necessary to maintain the honor of the country, though it is but just to Champ Clark and the Democrats who stood by him, as well as to the large majority of the Republicans and Progressives, to believe that they are not only capable of understanding what is to the honor of the country, but as sensitive on the subject as is Mr. Wilson. All the virtues of integrity and honor are not concentrated in him, to the loss of intelligence and honor by those who may not see through his spectacles. Slurring the intelligence and integrity of those who do not agree with him does not well become the President, to say the least of it.

The bill now goes to the Senate where it is to be hoped the administration lash will not be as potent as it was in the House, and where the Democrats may have some regard for party pledges.

THE CARROLL COUNTY LOCAL OPTION QUESTION

Some singular misinformation was circulated last week, and probably at an even earlier date than that, in relation to the alleged passage of a local option bill for Carroll county by the legislature. So circumstantial was the statement, that friends of the cause in the county were chagrined by the apprehension that in some way they had displayed ignorance on the subject and had failed to discover the fact. The Sentinel had been watching carefully for news through legislative reports and having received none, beyond the fact that the Wooden bill had passed the House, was confident a mistake had been made, from some source, crediting the passage of the bill to the Senate, and therefore only stated that it had gone to the Upper House for action. In fact it did not reach the Senate till last Friday night, having been delayed in transit for just one week, that, no doubt, having occurred on account of the time it caused in going, with a multitude of other bills, to the printer. That, at least, is one explanation of the delay. Leaders of the cause in this city were overwhelmed, the first of this week, with surprise, when informed that the measure was still pending, they having been confidently expecting that it was only awaiting the Governor's signature.

It may be impossible, on the Sentinel's next publication day, to state explicitly what the status of the measure may be on that date, and a resume of what had actually transpired, up to the early days of this week, is desirable, to a proper understanding of the proceedings ante-dating that period.

In the first place, then, there are two local option bills pending action—the Wooden bill, which has passed the House and the Snader bill, which has passed the Senate. The latter was introduced in the Senate by Senator Snader, who had it passed without much difficulty, and it is now pending in the House. Presumably it does not differ very materially from the Wooden bill, which is now on the Senate calendar awaiting action. One or the other of these bills may go to a third reading before the Sentinel reaches its readers this week, though that is not probable, as both the bills, as this is being written, are in the Temperance committee rooms, a better prospect of action being on that of the Wooden bill in the Senate than on that of the Snader bill in the House. Senator Snader is bending all his energies towards getting the Wooden bill before the Senate, being confident that it will command a sufficient number of votes to pass it in that Branch if it shall not be smothered in committee, or defeated by the dilatory tactics of its opponents. His own bill, if reported to the House from the Temperance Committee, will provoke a determined fight and likely occasion more delay than is likely to occur in the Senate, a much smaller body than the House, over the Wooden bill.

As already stated, this was the status of the local option fight for Carroll county at the beginning of the week. The Sentinel will endeavor, in another article elsewhere in this issue, to make clear any change in the conditions that may take place in the interim. Its analysis of the proceedings, previous to the beginning of the week, will, at least, let it be known that no bill had passed on the subject up to that date, and that in some way a strange mistake and misunderstanding had been made upon the minds of many ardent local-optionists. And it may be said that even now it is not safe to positively predict the success of the effort to carry the measure through.

THINGS ARE HAPPENING

These are days when things happen—some things at least. For instance: notwithstanding the row raised in the Maryland Senate over the alleged steal of a big slice of good roads money for the benefit of Baltimore City and a few of the counties, in a combination for that purpose, a majority of the Senators actually voted to increase the amount appropriated by the Price bill from $6,200,000 to $6,600,000, Baltimore to get the extra $400,000. The counties which went into the combination with the city, with the prospect of getting $533,000, rightfully intended for other counties, which repudiated the deal, were left out in the cold, having been deserted in cold blood by the grasping representatives of the city. And they get no sympathy in their disappointment. The public verdict is —served them right.

Another thing that is happening is an increase of the State debt and the consequent necessity, sooner or later, of increased direct State taxation. The Senate Finance Committee has introduced in that body the measure known as the General Loans bill, which calls for the creation of a special debt of $950,000, the proceeds to be used in meeting obligations which are not provided for by the current receipts for ordinary purposes. Among these items of expenditure, to be provided for by the loan contemplated, are $225,000, to complete the State Normal School; $11,500, for completing the Frederick Armory; $10,500, for the Salisbury Armory; $25,000, for the Annapolis Armory; $110,000, for improvements at Springfield Hospital; $80,000, for Spring Grove Hospital; $100,000, for Crownsville State Hospital; $100,000, for similar improvements at the Eastern Shore Hospital; $28,000, for Rosewood State Training School; $60,000, for the new armories at Belair and Elkton, and $200,000, for the Fourth Regiment Armory in Baltimore. No doubt these are all necessary objects, though why some of these country armories are to be of rather expensive character is not so clear or why nearly a million dollars additional interest bearing indebtedness is to be saddled upon the taxpayers to avoid expenditures which should be provided as the causes for them arise, may be questioned. The tax on land in this State, farming land, particularly, is becoming onerous and burdensome and there is no relief from its exaction in sight. Over in Pennsylvania the farmers are entirely free from this taxation. Maryland should surely be as capable of taking care of her farmers as is this big sister State of her's.

A REVIVAL OF BUCKET-SHOPPING

Little has been heard about the operations of "bucket-shops" for the past five years. The revival in many places of alleged such offices, as reported a few days ago to the New York stock exchange, was therefore a matter for regret.

The term "bucket-shop" is a little misleading. It is a term of the slums and the underworld, originating in large cities, from low creatures who drain empty beer kegs and retail their drippings in cellars and joints to congregations of vagrants. The name finally attached itself to a certain type of brokerage office.

Having in mind this inglorious label, the confiding investor is often puzzled. The so-called bucket-shop may inhabit buildings with lofty ceilings, massive construction and glittering furniture. There may be a group of buzzing tickers, oriental rugs, and sumptuous private apartments, where veiled ladies can consult their advisers.

The fraudulent bucket-shop has perhaps a thousand customers, each buying a share of a popular stock on a dollar margin. They are from the most struggling economic levels —the office boy, the servant, the poor widow, the day laborer.

Having this $1000 cash in hand, it used to be easy for the shop, acting with others of its class, to select a time of dull business and depression, and offer for sale 1000 shares of this stock. Probably the price would drop far enough to register on the ticker a quotation a point down. Then the bucket-shop would close the account. By making a "matched purchase" of $1000, the bucket-shop could avoid paying out any money, except commission of one-eighth of one per cent on $2000, amounting to $2.50. It could pocket the balance of the customers' money, amounting to $997.50.

The general outlawing of "wash sales" has thrown difficulties about this particular type of transaction. But there are plenty of other ways of meeting the public appetite for humbugs.

The armies of the unemployed would probably be glad to stand in the bread line, provided they could be assured of getting buttered toast.

Many of the sufferers in the slum life of the cities would be willing to work on farms provided there was no chance of getting into some jail.

The cold storage interests lost heavily on their butter stock this year, but it must be a satisfaction to them to think of the prices the consumers had to pay for a time.
