THE CORRECT VIEW.—The speech of Frederick Douglass at the unveiling of the Lincoln statue in Washington, while paying a warm tribute to Mr. Lincoln, shows that he regards him as more distinctly Unionist than an abolitionist. This is the correct view, but it is one which not only the emancipated race, but many intelligent white people have not taken, or be willing to take. Mr. Lincoln has been popularly looked upon as a leader of emancipation, whereas nothing was further from his mind in the beginning than to make emancipation a result of the war. There were those of course, who had covert purpose from the first, but the leaders of the republican party, like Mr. Lincoln, were led into the war for the preservation of the Union, but were involuntarily carried along, to the satisfaction of all, by the tide of events to the abolition of slavery. Yet the republican leaders have succeeded in making the freedmen believe that the republican party is entitled to their eternal gratitude and their everlasting political allegiance as their friends and champions, but for disinterested philanthropy the negro would never have been delivered from the house of bondage. When the black people become generally as intelligent as Douglass they will discover that what Bismarck calls the "iron dice of destiny" falling in their favor secured their freedom and the special good will of any political party. They are really rather more directly indebted for their freedom to the presence of the Southern people in the war than otherwise, for had the South availed himself of the repeated offers of the federal government to save slavery by laying down their arms there would have been no general emancipation. —*Balto. Messrs. Seth W. Fowle & Sons, Boston.

Gentlemen:—I have been afflicted for two years with what I supposed to be consumption. I have suffered from a severe pain in my left side, the pain being but slight at first, but increasing in severity every day until it was almost impossible for me to follow my vocation without great suffering and he was excruciating pain. I have tried almost every known remedy without receiving the least relief. My brother having been afflicted with spitting of blood and the tendency of consumption, and having been cured by DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY, recommended it to me, and I at once commenced to use it with the most satisfactory results. My pain gradually growing less and I feel much better than I have for some time past. As long as the BALSAM does as much to restore my health as it has done thus far, I shall continue using it, and I would advise all afflicted with lung disease give it a trial. I remain yours truly DANIEL B. HARPER.

The celebrated author, in this admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from 30 years' successful practice, that the frightful consequences of Self-abuse may be effectually cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife—pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.
