Two lines of effort for the legion suggest themselves at once. It will naturally seek to secure justice for the soldier. If in any respect or in given so much are not treated with unfairly treated men.

But one has confidence to believe that this side of the legion's work will not demand much of its attention. Its main function must be to preserve the principles for which the soldiers fought. It must see that the high ideales maintained by the army, the government and the people during the war are not forgotten. The dessons of efficiency and discipline learned by the soldiers must be applied to the work of daily life and the business of government.

The tendency is going to be strong. it is already very apparent, to slip away from the simple living and the community spirit of sacrifice and strike, somebody's office boy can't work so mainifest during the war. be ready on time. The legion must help the people live up to the level that they have shown they can attain.

Of that kind, this country needs all it can get. Where a surplus of labor exists, t is a sign of maladjustment in the industries. The employer ought not to expect to find a reserve of idle work seekers who can be drawn upon at any time. There is really work enough for everyone, if the job can only find the man. It needs a highly organized system to bring the man and the job together. Without that, there will always be a dangerous fringe of idleness.
