THE SPIRIT OF "GET THERE."

When some social philosopher, who will need a large infusion of the quality himself, some time undertakes that uncommonly interesting book "A History of Courage," he will have a very entertaining task in pointing out the changes that have taken place in the popular ideal of that first of human excellences.

On purely gladiatorial and military courage he will have to spend little space, of course; the conception of it probably has not changed much either way in a matter of three or four thousand years, and takes very little thought of motives or morals.

When it comes to the other and more complicated courage, however, the "courage of conduct," the author of the great work suggested will find puzzling changes; among which I hope he will choose for attention a particular phase in the last quarter of the nineteenth century, seems to me not to have received the proper notice from moralists.

I mean the admiration that has grown up for the "nerve" of that modern type known by many means, from financier to wrecker. "You may say what you like," I heard apropos of one of the "Young Napoleons of Wall Street," "of course it's all wrong, and I have no idea of defending the man, but I can't help admiring his nerve."

Was there ever before a popular disposition to find a virture of courage in the ingenious betrayal of trusts (commonly so as to keep within the letter of the law, and so avoid even the greater personal risks) and the skilful evasion of promises? The fox and the lion have furnished plenty of apologues, but not with this moral.

The reason why cheating at cards has always remained a thing which men would not own to who would confess most other sins and wickednesses, is the intrinsic cowardice that lies in it; even "gambler's nerve" is not applied to men who are not playing by the laws of game.—Scribner.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

"Baltimore has some excuse," remarks the News, "for the fine residuum of mud which now adorns all the principal business streets in the facts that the city's population has increased by 36,000 within the last twelve months, and that 200 miles of street car lines are now being laid down. Leaving out Chicago, there is no other large city in the country which is making such immense strides in population and material prosperity, and it is gratifying beyond measure that the moral and intellectual progress is keeping pace with the industrial and commercial development."

Fancy Silks—Novelties.

Market reports allege an advance in Silk. The reports are, we believe, correct.

Hence this is a paradox. A large variety of Silks that if stored until Autumn would then be sold at $4, which shall now go at $1.65. All strictly new. Why? We never store goods for future sales. Our way, the movement of the hour,

These Novelties started to move themselves on Saturday 'Twould be mean not to tell you of them,

You know Cunard and Galatea, have known them for three seasons. Liked them better and better as the months wore on.

More friends than ever now—styles so neat, simple, so just-exactly-right,

Marine Suiting comes to round out the series.

Between the three there's something for any child's, girl's, woman's romp or ramble Summer-time wear, and no need to dodge briars and slivers,

Cunard also comes in the plain white so much wanted for Women's Outing Suits.

To Farmers.

The Van Wagoner Peninsula Farm Fence Co. will set up a rod or two in Denton of their very superior farm fence. This should interest all owners of land. It is said to be a handsome, strong and, withal, the cheapest fence on the market—tension, expansion, contraction, and stretch, are all under complete control. It is proposed to sell either county, district, club and farm rights. Six miles of this fence were sold in Chestertown the first two weeks after sample was up. Come and see it. A grand opportunity for profitable investment for active parties. Address for further information and circulars,
