CHESTERTOWN - FEB. 22, 1890

A FEW DONT'S.

Especially Intended for Boy or Girl Readers.

Dear boys and girls, may I say a few "don'ts" to you, if I'll be very smiling and pleasant about it? They are not agreeable, I know, but like some other bitter medicine, they may sometimes do good. So come, all you who are "willing-hearted," and want to grow up into the very best of men and women, and listen to me just for a few minutes.

Don't chew gum! It hurts you. You were not made to chew a cud like cows, and any departure from the plan on which your bodies were made will bring evil upon you, in some way. It may not make you feel bad in any way, for a while, but you are opening wide the door for that terror, "King Dyspepsia."

Then, you'll lose your rosy cheeks and bright eyes; in fact, you will lose all enjoyment of living. Will the present pleasure of chewing pay for the future misery?

And, oh! boys, it will make you an easy prey to the temptation to chew tobacco—it is a stepping-stone to tobacco—and that from of temptation is about hard enough to resist now. Don't make it any harder.

Don't talk in a loud voice on the streets, or any public place. Don't do any thing to attract attention to yourselves in public. I assure you that older people have eyes and opinions; and they watch you more closely than you think; don't think they don't see because they make no sign. They judge you by your actions, and the quiet, modest boy, or girl, is the one who is most admired.

Don't be selfish in public. Don't be so busy having a good time yourselves that you prevent others around you from enjoying any thing; it is unkind, and you don't want to be unkind, I know. Don't go to a public place to have a frolic. If you do not want to give attention to what is going on there, stay away, and have your frolic at home.

Don't drink tea and coffee. Tea is very injurious—more so than most people know. For one thing, it puckers up the lining of your stomachs and toughens it; which, you must be able to understand, would not help to keep it healthy. Besides, not containing one particle of nutriment—but rather poison—it dries up your blood.

As for coffee: It is indigestible and has much the same influence on the heart as does whiskey. It weakens them; and, by and by, you will need all your strength to bear the strains upon you which are sure to come.

Don't heat your blood with hot things, as spices, etc., if you want to keep your complexion fresh.

Don't, oh! don't rob yourselves of your necessary sleep; and your necessary sleep is a great deal. It calls you early to bed and not too early to rise, in spite of the old proverb. There is nothing that wastes your future vitality so fast as lack of sufficient sleep.

I doubt if one who lacks necessary sleep at that time ever "catches up." You may violate this, any of the laws of health, for awhile, and perhaps, feel none the worse for it just now; but you will surely suffer for it sometime, if you live.

Girls, don't use powder on your faces. That custom is heathenish, a relic of barbarism! Don't be deceived by the plea that it will take off the "shine." It is a very perverted taste that can think that death like, leprous look more beautiful than the wholesome "shine" given by soap and water.

Don't delude yourselves with the idea that powder, properly applied, won't show. It always shows, and the results of its use show. The skin, as you probably know, is full of little pores through which the insensible perspiration is all the time passing. If you clog up these pores with powder, it gives nature a hard struggle to do her work—which she must do—and the result, in time, is inflammed and enlarged pores, which cause the skin to look coarse and red.

Boys, don't adopt the very mistaken idea that it is manly to smoke and drink; to treat and use bad words. How is it manly? Any fool can do all that. It is the really manly, strong boy who can refuse, and is determined to keep his lips clean. Will you try to be such boys?

And girls, dear girls, don't help boys to do any of those evil things. Perhaps girls are about as much to blame, in such matters, as the boys. Boys, as a rule, want to make themselves agreeable to the girls; and there is no surer way, perhaps, to make a boy leave off smoking, and kindred habits, than to let him see that his girl friends disapprove of him and avoid his society on account of it.

So girls, discountenance it!

Don't let a boy whom you know is given to such ways visit you, or even go home from church with you. Let him see that he must make himself fit for a lady's company, if he would have it.—Rosa Thorn, in Santa Claus.

MORE TESTIMONY AGAINST REED.—Judge L. C. Collins, who was the republican speaker of the Illinois House of Representatives in 1883, gives interesting testimony bearing on the action of Speaker Reed. The democratic minority then sought to defeat a high-license bill by refusing to vote and raising the question of no quorum. The republicans demanded that the Speaker should count members present, whether voting or not, but he refused, and a caucus having been called to censure him, it was decided to submit the question to James G. Blaine and abide by his decision. A telegram was sent explaining the situation, and Mr. Blaine replied that Speaker Collins was right, and that "a contrary ruling had never been heard of and could not be sustained." Judge Collins adds: "The rule is a double-edged sword which cuts both ways. Speaker Reed will have to recede from it. The republicans cannot afford to stand by it."

A MAN went to a doctor to be treated for insomnia. The doctor tried all sorts of medicine on him, but he did not get any better. At last he asked the patient what part of the night he lay awake. "Night!" said he. "I can sleep all night. The trouble with me is I cannot sleep in the daytime."

No man's spirit was ever hurt by doing his duty; on the contrary, one good action, one temptation resisted and overcome, one sacrifice of desire or interest, purely for conscience sake, will prove a cordial for weak and low spirits far beyond what indulgence or divergence can do for them.

WHAT is becoming is honorable, and what is honorable is becoming.

A Good Word for the Grange.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—In looking over your paper, giving the account of the Farmers' Council, held in Chestertown on Jan. 28th, one of the speakers stated that he was not favorably impressed with the grange. He says he joined it and found it not an organization of farmers. He was disgusted and drew out. I am sorry that the ex-brother made that assertion, for I am sure every one belonging to Fairlee Grange, or the Patrons of Husbandry, and who clearly and intelligently understand its aims and objects, if not utterly selfish, must desire its success. To achieve this result and how to do it successfully, so as to increase its numbers and to secure the confidence and respect of the agriculturist, for whom it was designed, as well to secure the good will of others, is a very important question, not only in Kent, but elsewhere. Farmers' organizations are a necessity in or to successfully meet organized power. The farmers must form thorough organization among themselves, and as there is no national and complete organization except the grange, it must be either this or nothing, and farmers must, themselves, decide the question. It has no middle ground; simply two sides from which to choose. One is to unite in organization and co-operation, work in self-defence and protection, and the other is to keep aloof from organization, which virtually acknowledges that we are incapable of self-government. Local agricultural organizations have only local value and interest. State organizations have value only to certain ends and in certain directions. National agricultural associations and agricultural congresses may accomplish objects in certain ways, but none of these will ever relieve the farmer from bearing burdens of injustice or elevate them as a class. We certainly do not propose to interfere with wages; on the contrary we hope as we lessen our own burdens the laborer will be benefited, as the benefits, we hope, will be mutual, for we must rise and fall together. The farm laborer suffers equally with the employer in the contest. We wage to relieve ourselves and him from the pressure surrounding us.

CHEWING GUM.

The Very Sensible Advice Which a Little Girl Gave to Her Doll.

"I hope you will never want to chew gum Angelina. I should hate to see a dolly of mine chewing gum. You will never catch me doing such a foolish thing.

"Of course I did use to, but that was a whole week ago nearly.

"I know plenty of little girls—and boys too—that chew gum every day right on the streets. And it does not look pretty, Angelina. If you could talk you would say so yourself.

"And I know just a few little girls—and boys, too—that take their gum with 'em when they go to church. Isn't that too bad?

"And the other night I went to our school concert—I would have sung in it only I had a cold when they were practicing—and there was little Laura Bascom, that has such pretty curls and big brown eyes. What do you s'pose she did?

"Why, she kept her gum in her mouth all the time in the grand chorus, and chewed it some at the end of every line. Now, Angelina, don't you think that perfectly shocking?

"But I know another pretty little girl who did pretty near as bad about a week ago.

"She forgot and laid her gum right on the what-not, near some sea-shells and pretty stones.

"And there was company that day, and a nice old gentleman was looking at the stones, and he picked it up and said: 'Bless me! what sort of stone is this?' and looked at the little girl just as hard as he possibly could.

"And her face was hot as fire, and she just said, so you could hardly hear her, 'That's my gum.'

"And then she just ran away to her own bed-room and didn't even go down to tea that evening.

"No, Angelina, I'd rather not tell you her name. But you'll never see me chewing gum any more."

BE WISE.

Young man be wise, no matter what the difficulties may be that surround you. Take advantage of every opportunity that opens the way to to a further gain in culture and the development of the finer sensibilities of your nature. Some may say that they did not have an opportunity to develope their mental faculties while they were in their youth; if this is the case with any of you (and there is no doubt that some of you have met with this misfortune) but your attention is called to the fact that it is never too late to learn.

For the benefit of those who feel themselves deficient in education, and desire to put themselves under a course of training from a competent instructor, their attention is respectfully called to the night school that is now being held in Stam's Hall; it affords an excellent opportunity for those who feel themselves deficient in education to become educated at no loss of time and at a very light expense. The mind must have employment; if it is not engaged in doing good work it will be engaged in doing evil work; if we allow our minds to constantly dwell upon evil thoughts and evil doings, which will be the consequence if we do not try to develop our minds, we are in danger of becoming desperate characters; but, on the other hand, if we will keep our minds filled with good thoughts and noble deeds the evil will be crowded out, and by and by the good thoughts will be put into action and we will become noble men and women.

Some say that it is too late for them to develop their mental faculties if they have arrived at a certain age, but that idea should be abolished.

"'Tis never too late for a noble deed;
For, blest by the angels' tears,
It plants in the breasts of men a seed
That will grow in after years;
And words of kindness, of hope and cheer,
Will always comfort lend;
We must live for love and banish fear.—
It is never too late to mend."
