Washington sees the President, although everybody has a chance to see him if he wishes. Any lawabiding citizen of the United States who is known to a Senator or Congressman, or can be properly vouched for, can get an introduction to President Harding. That kind of an introduction simply means that a man wil have a chance to shake hands with the President and exchange a few words, but does not mean a meeting to talk about any matters of business. A meeting with the president to talk lover any important subject of public, affairs requires a special appointmeent with an understanding as to the subject that is to be discussed. That, of course, is necessary, for otherwise all the time of the President would be taken up by all sorts of cranks who have the notion that they have schemes which will cure all the ills of the country.
