FARM AND GARDEN

MODEL ICEHOUSE.

Designed With Reference to Convenience and Saving Labor.

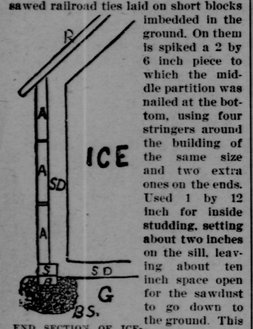
While ice is generally spoken of as a luxury among farmers it is rapidly becoming regarded in another light. There is not only comfort in it for the farmer and his family, but economy in the keeping of farm products, besides which, with the increasing demand for ice, some money may be made by selling it to others. The house here described can be built for a moderate sum, and the man who devised it had in view points not always considered. He is thus quoted in Ohio Farmer:

CONVENIENT ICEHOUSE.

The convenience of the house built for the storing of ice for a family supply is of as great importance as its ability to keep the ice from melting. The time of storing occupies but a day or two and that at a time of the year when the farmer is not busy, but during the hot months when ice is in daily use the farmer is a busy man. The chores ought to be few and quickly done. The filling of the refrigerator and the placing of ice for the dairy from the average icehouse is a daily task that is laborious. In view of these facts I put off building an icehouse until I was satisfied that I could build one which I could enter without closing the door, loosen the ice desired and carry it out, all without having to uncover the remaining ice each time and still have it keep well.

My house is built as follows: It is 16 by 20 feet and 8 feet high to the square. The rafters are 15 feet long, making a roof with a very steep pitch. The house is built with three walls, making two spaces, the inner one to be filled with dry sawdust and the outer for the circulation of air. The inner space is one foot wide and is continued up the rafters to within three feet of the comb, while the outer space is six inches and is continued on the ends up to the comb. This leaves an opening of but 3 by 13 feet on each side of the roof, which is not lined with sawdust. Close up at the top of each gable is a 2 by 2 window for ventilation. The door is 3 by 5½ feet, is in the gable and is 6 inches thick, divided into three air spaces and is nearly airtight when closed.

The foundation was made by using sawed railroad ties laid on short blocks imbedded in the ground. On them is spiked a 2 by 6 inch piece to which the middle partition was nailed at the bottom, using four stringers around the building of the same size and two extra ones on the ends. Used 1 by 12 inch for inside studding, setting about two inches on the sill, leaving about ten inch space open for the sawdust to go down to the ground. This leaves all space open to the highest point that sawdust is filled to, so that when it settles more sawdust can be put in.



END SECTION OF ICE-HOUSE.

[A, air space; SD, sawdust; R, roof; S, sill; B, foundation block; BS, broken stone.]

Outside of the building a ditch was dug as deep as the foundation and entirely around it, filled with fine broken stone and covered with earth for drainage.

The ice is stored on about one foot of sawdust and about three inches between the ice and the walls and four inches on top of the ice.

Destroying Insects in Winter.

Many of our most destructive insects pass the winter either among matted prostrate grass, among fallen leaves or especially along osage hedges, lanes and fence corners. Wherever such places can be burned over in late fall, winter or early spring the effect will be to destroy many of these. Instead of having the annual clearing up in May, as many do who clear up their premises at all, this should be done during the seasons above mentioned, as by May many of the destructive insects have left their winter quarters and are beyond reach.

In the orchard the falling of the leaves will reveal cocoons and even insects themselves upon the trees that cannot be easily detected while the foliage is still hanging to these trees. Many insects pass the winter within a folded leaf that is attached to the twig to prevent it from dropping off and in this way deceive the eye of the orchardist. It will pay to go over the orchard and remove all of the cocoons and dried leaves still clinging to the trees.

Table Decoration.

For dinner table decorations as far as coloring is concerned it is best to keep to the warmer tints. Avoid the use of white by itself and keep to shades of crimson, old gold or even bronze tones, the latter especially where there is a large display of old silver. The vases may be filled with well berried holly points and mistletoe, with Christmas roses as a sort of undergrowth to the various stands. Frosted branches and sprays are always fashionable at this season and have a very charming effect. Their beauty may be much enhanced by a judicious use of bright ribbon bows. Lamps and candles must all have their shades to match the principal coloring used in the decoration. Tall tubes look very well on a large table, especially where space is a consideration—i. e., where the table is otherwise well laden with dessert or with silver bowls of bonbons.

A PEEP

Into the future would sadden many a happy woman. The misery of marriage often results from ailments which maidenly modesty kept hidden. When doctors are at last consulted they frequently fail to help. They do not understand the root of the trouble. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has cured in thousands of cases where doctors entirely failed.

"I had been a great sufferer from female weakness," writes Mrs. M. B. Wallace, of Muenster, Cook Co., Texas. "I tried four doctors and none did me any good. I suffered six years, but at last I found relief. I followed your advice, and took eight bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and four of the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I now feel like a new woman. I have gained eighteen pounds."
