RIGHTS AND DUTIES

Too many people are very much interested in demanding their rights, enjoy an aloof position, and they but are not much concerned about the duties that they owe. This thought was expressed by Dr. O' Shea, Superintendent of schools in New York city, in requesting that the teachers read the Declaration of Independence to their children. He felt that in addition to all the human rights which are proclaimed under this noble declaration, they have certain duties which rest on them also, so that the people with whom they come han with those supposed to be below cover and kept his shed looking betin contact shall not be deprived of their own rights.

A great deal has been said about the United States being the land of freedom, but it is not so often remarked that to obtain the ends we all desire, there must also be cooperation and harmonious effort.

There are many people who go through the world in a state of indignation, and with the feeling that their rights are constantly being trampled upon. Many of them do not stop to ask the question whether they are depriving someone else of the things that person has a right to enjoy. The man who is constantly sore of unjust prices that he has to pay, may himself be depriving someone of his rights by failing to do a good day's work in return for his pay, by
