some suspicion and dislike? Or are you won to such a stranger, and think that he or she will be an addition to your home city? The way a town meets the strangers that come to it is one of the factors in that community's development.

The newcomer in Westminster feels like the traditional cat in a strange garret when he first lands here, as he does anywhere else. But it makes a big difference to him if the folks next door come in to call, and tell him they like to see good looking people move in. His first impression becomes favorable, and he says this is a good town, and he would like to stay here.
