HEEDLESS BUYING

The action of those people who fail to back up home enterprise properly, and who make a large part of their purchases out of town, is very often not any deliberate policy. It occurs much of the time that they just happen to do so. They happen to see some stuff advertised in a mail order catalog, or they happen to be passing some store in some more or less distant place, and are taken with some articles pushed in these ways, and they buy it.

The money they have to spend is a fund which should be thoughtfully used for two purposes: First, to | supply their own needs; second, to promote home town development. The second result is thrown in free. because it costs them no more, and commonly less, to buy in the fine
