POETRY.

WHAT IS LOVE.

What is love? I asked a maiden,
Beaming bright in beauty's sky,
Love she knew, and with it laden,
Wore the arrows in her eye.
Blushes soft came o,er her stealing,
Low her words of music fall:—
"Love's a strange, delicious feeling,
What it is, I cannot tell."

What is love? I asked a mother,
Bending o,er her first born child;
O! the bliss she could not smother,
As she looked at me and smiled.
Something holier than pleasure
Lit the fire within her eyes,
God had given her a treasure,
And she loved the holy prize.

What is love? I asked the glory
Of my household and my life,
When in after years the story
Of my passion won a wife;
Deep in mine her glances glowing,
Burned with love and golden glee,
While her arms around me throwing
Kisses sweet she gave to me.

What is love? O, brightest angle!
Wilt thou n.t thyself unroll?
Lo! I feel thy soft evangel
Stir the waters of my soul;
Love is joy divinely given
To the souls of earth again,
Binding heart to heart and heaven,
With God's own electric chain.

THE CENSUS IN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. Kennedy, who some time since visited England for the purpose of making inquiries relative to making in the census statistics of that country, states that there is but little analogy between the census returns of the two countries. The census in Great Britian, as has been stated heretofore, was taken in one day. The returns include none of the agricultural and statistical tables which fill as great a space in the American returns as they are prominent in relation to the interest of the country, and a knowledge of their advance or decline necessary to an understanding of our condition and progress. The British census agents confine their attention to an enumeration of the living population, and take no statistics relating to mortality, and omit a great variety of facts of much interest and importance. Mr. Kennedy states that 44,000 persons were imployed in taking these limited details, while in this country the taking of the entire census, statistical information included, employed only 3,144 marshals and assistants. Considering the relative extent of England and Scotland with our own country it will be an easy matter to ascertain how disproportionate was the duty to perform, and how much more satisfactory are the census returns of the United States than those of Great Britian although the former occupied the time of 3,144 persons and the latter that of 44,000. It would seem from the above facts that John Bull can take many useful lessons of Brother Jonathan, and it is more than likely that before another census is taken, he will ask the question—"How is it done in the United States?"

☞There is that is the ensuing effusion, says the Knickerbocker, which cannot fail to rouse the slumbering patrotism of every American heart. It was composed by a Western poet, in "one hour by a Connecticut clock"—

"What! bu'st this glorious Union up,
An' go to drawen' triggers,
Just for a thunderin' passel of
Emancipated niggers?
The eagle of Amerikv,
That flue across the sees,
An' throwed the bluddy British lion
Ker slump upon his knees;
Say—shall we rend him lim from lim,
Wun wing wun way, and wun tother,
And every sepperit pin fether
A flying at the other?"

This is the kind of spirit that is going to preserve out "great and gel-lorious ked'ntry" from premature dissolution.

SAVING ONE'S BACON.—A boy who had not returned after the holidays to Whinchester school, which the master charged him to do, came back at last with loaded with a fine ham as a bribe to his master, who took the ham, but flogged the lad, and told him, "You may give my complimente to your mother for the ham, but I assure you it shall not save your bacon."

"Come here, Kate, love. Now tell me, what be I t spell?" "Don't know marm." "How stupid! What is put around your waist every day? Come now, speak out. What makes you look so sheepish? answer me directly—what is put around your waist every day?" "Sniggle Fritzgle's arm, but he never kissed me but once.'

☞A fellow was engaged to a gir in Main, but liked her sister better than he did her. Wishing to be off with the old love before he was on with his new he asked his betrothed what she would take to release him—she replied that about sixty-two dollars she thought was as much as he was worth; whereupon he paid the cash, took a quit claim, and married the sister.

☞The following shopkeeper's sign is located in Camden:

"Troast fat hens and roosters tew,
And feeds the pigs with corn and otew,
And every day hath semethin' new,
Tew tickle down my boarders throtes.
SALLIE SNUGGS."
