In Dorchester County Court,

MARCH TERM, 1809.

ON application of William B. Smith, of Dorchester County, by petition in writing, praying the benefit of the act of the General Assembly for the relief of sundry insolvent debtors, passed at November session, eighteen hundred and five, and of the supplementary acts thereto, on the terms mentioned in the said acts, a list of his creditors on oath as far as he can ascertain them, as directed by the said acts, being annexed to his petition; and the said Court being satisfied by competent testimony that the said Wm. B. Smith has resided the two preceding years within the state of Maryland: It is thereupon adjudged and ordered by the Court that the said William B. Smith, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in one of the newspapers printed at Easton, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Norfolk, once a week for four successive weeks before the twenty-eighth day of October next, and also by setting up like notice at the court house door, and at the door of one of the public taverns in Cambridge, in the county aforesaid, give notice to his creditors to appear before the said county court, at the court house in the said county, on the said day, for the purpose of recommending a trustee for their benefit, the said William B. Smith then and there complying with the requisites of the said act of assembly.

H. DICKINSON, Clk.

The following article, published in Cobbett's Register of July 20th is one of the best written satyres, not only upon the vapid and vain—glorious boastings of the London ministerial editors, respecting the Austrian successes after the battle of Aspern on the 21st and 22d of May, but also upon the English and Austrian ministry and the men by whom their armies are officered and led to battle. It bears particularly severe upon the English officers in the land service, to whom truth at all times is a keen reproach.

SUMMARY OF POLITICS.

AUSTRIA.—Upon what grounds I know not, but it is certain, that an opinion is generally prevalent that the emperor of Austria is getting the upperhand of his brother of France. The newspapers appear to be so full of this notion, and so gay and lively and even witty upon the occasion, that I have been earnestly endeavouring to find out some reason for believing their hopes and expectations to be built on solid foundations. After long and diligent enquiry, however, I can find no such foundations. I still see Napoleon at Vienna, and I know, that if he were in London, the wretches, who now pretend to believe, that he is in a state of disgrace, would lose not a moment in hastening to swear allegiance to him, or, if required, to his horse. How men are to be found impudent enough, to argue, that merely because he lies in the capital of the country a month without making any great advances, he must therefore, be in a fair way of being defeated, is sufficiently astonishing; but, how any body, any six people in the world, can be found to believe them to look upon such reasoning as sound, surpasses one's utmost notions of credulity. Were I, indeed, to hear of his having actually fallen back some score or two of leaguse, I should begin to listen to hopes of his final defeat; but, while I see him still in the capital of the Austrian empire, with a part of his army pushing on into Hungary, must I not be a fool to believe to persuade myself, or to suffer others to pursuade me, that he is in a fair way of being defeated, and driven back in disgrace? My decided opinion is, that Napoleon, so far from being on the eve of a defeat is on the eve of totally annihilating the authority of the House of Austria; and this opinion is founded upon the same reasoning, whereon if Napoleon were in London with a conquering army, I should be of opinion that he was upon the eve of totally annihilating the authority of the house of Brunswick. He MAY be defeated; his present situation MAY be perilous; & the French fleet, when it comes out again, MAY beat the English fleet; but as to likelihood, one is, at present just as likely as the other: If, indeed, the philosophers, who conduct the Morning Post and the Courier, could assure me, and convince me of the truth of their assurances, that Bonaparte's army was officered with pimps, buffoons, bastards, harlot's bullies, and brothers, uncles and cousins: if, indeed, they could prove to me, that Bonaparte did not look upon BRAINS as being necessary in the composition of a general, & was content to take any creature that was brought to him, provided it had a pair of eyes just to keep itself out of the fire, and a hold in its face wherein to put victuals and drink; if they could prove to me, that Napoleon did not see with his own eyes, but with the eyes of that many headed monster, his Corps Legislatif, who by their deeds, have proved themselves to be the most corrupt assembly that has ever been heard of in the civilized world; if indeed, Bonaparte were once to fall into the practice of suffering the high stations in his army to be filled up with the booby sons, and other relations of these fellows, or of their wives and their mistresses, or, which would be more likely, by the paramours of their wives and mistresses; if I could be assured that he exchanged the Dukes of Rivoli, Dantzic, Abrantes, and the rest of his generals, for an equal number of besotted animals, one half of whose life has been spent over the bottle, and the other half in bed; if I could be convinced, that his army was under the command of known, proven, notorious fools and peculators, many of whom united the two characters in the same person, and who on account of their ideocy, had a subaltern peculator sent with them to take care of their pillage; it in short, I could be convinced; that, all of a sudden, the character of Napoleon's army was totally changed, and that, instead of exciting fear in the ene-
