Household Questions

When potatoes have been overboiled and gone to broth, lay a strong cloth in the colander and empty the contents of the saucepan into it. Gather up the cloth as if for a pudding, and squeeze tightly until every drop of moisture is out, and you will find that you have a light, floury ball.

New Engine for Fighting Airplane Fires

Here is a photograph of the chemical fire engine that was tested at Le Bourget airdrome, near Paris, recently, to determine its efficacy in fighting fires of gasoline or oil. An old plane was set ablaze with a large reservoir of gasoline and the new device put it out in 30 seconds. The engine consists of a fast car fitted with a specially adapted hose which throws artificial snow and chemical froth on the fire.

Bedtime Story by Thornton W. Burgess

WHERE THE RATS WERE.

IF BILLY MINK had didn't know where the rats who had left the big barn had gone to, the farmer who owned the big barn and the henhouse and the woodpile knew. Yes, indeed, the farmer and his family knew just where those rats were. They were in the farmhouse!

You see, the wise gray old leader of the rats knew the safest place for them was in that farmhouse. In the first place it was big and that meant that there was plenty of room with ever and ever so many hiding places. There was food there, plenty of it, to be stolen. They could be very comfortable in that farmhouse. More than this, they would be safe from Billy Mink.

That gray old leader knew that Billy Mink would hesitate a long time about actually entering the house because of his fear of man. He didn't believe that Billy would dream of looking for them in that house, especially if he couldn't track them over there. This Billy couldn't do, as the wise old leader very well knew, because it had been snowing when the rats left the big barn and the falling snow had covered their tracks and destroyed the scent.

So, while Billy Mink was looking under the woodpile and in the henhouse for those rats they were making themselves very much at home in the farmhouse. They could climb about between the walls and go where they pleased. The first thing to do was to make homes for the babies. It didn't take some of those rats long to find the way to the attic. Now the attic was filled with trunks and boxes and papers and all sorts of odds and ends. It was just such a place as rats love. Right away the old mother rat began to drag up papers and make rags of clothing that hung in the attic. Rags and paper make the finest kind of nest for a rat. These nests they hid in dark places behind boxes and trunks.

And while they were busy with this, the father rats set out to search for food. It didn't take them long to find the pantry and gnaw holes through the wall into it. And they were not quiet about their work, either. The farmer and the farmer's wife knew what was going on. They could hear the scamper of little feet across the attic floor and faint squeaks between the walls. They could hear the gnawing.

"Gracious!" exclaimed the farmer. "I should think all the rats in the barn had moved over here! He little guessed how exactly he had hit on the truth.

THIS LAND OF OURS

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

NO man is master in this land of ours,
Since every citizen retains his power.
The humblest is the highest, since the low
Selects the high, and tells him thus and so.
Who takes an office does not take a crown,
Becomes the servant of the lower down.
Hires out his services for certain pay,
A hundred million others to obey.

They are the government, he but the tool,
The instrument by which the people rule.
What is this capitol upon the hill?
It is the workshop of the people's will.
Then where dwells pow'r? Not under gilded domes—
Beneath the roofs of twenty million homes.
There reign what kings there are, who delegate
To men less busy matters of the state.

And they, these public servants, rise and fall
As they their limitations shall recall.
Theirs not to order, wear a diadem,
Theirs but to order as we order them.
How he shall toil and where he shall abide
Are matters for the freeman to decide.
Not always right the humble man may be,
But better to be wrong and still be free.

Test for the Nerves

Dr. Thomas H. Staggers, mechano-therapist of Cleveland, Ohio, thinks he has something here as he has proved to his satisfaction that all upon the mouth of a beer bottle. The something is test of steady nerves. Working most of two days, the doctor succeeded in erecting a tower of 3,365 matches before someone with a heavy tread caused the edifice to collapse. This tower upon which the doctor is shown working, is his second attempt. He has promised to keep at it until the first tower is left far in the shade.

It's Harder to Lose Pounds Than It Is to Gain More of Them

Overweight Generally Has But One Cause and That Is Overeating.

"The slim, the irritable, the hungry woman takes on the proportion of one of our minor menaces," says Fannie Hurst in her amusing little book, "No Food With My Meals." Miss Hurst is writing frankly from her own experience in attempting successfully to lose pounds. She admits herself that although she undertook her reduction program under the direction of the doctor, she was not content with the comparatively slow results and cut still further the low calorie diet which the physician gave her.

It is one of the mysteries of life that it is much harder to lose added pounds than it is to gain them. The bathroom scales, which are now so general a part of equipment, enable us to keep a check on weight. It is not so easy for those extra pounds which creep upon us unaware a. it was once upon a time. A few days of dieting in time will save the slender figure. Remember, however, that, in general, the addition of a few extra pounds with the years is an asset. They are definitely needed to balance those lines which the years write.

Unless there is some glandular deficiency, overweight has but one cause, namely, overeating. The avoidance of more calories than are needed for use by the body for its own processes and for the activity of our lives may usually be a simple matter if there are no between meal sweets and no over-indulgence in bread, butter, other fats and rich desserts with meals. Not complete avoidance!

It is only the second helpings that are usually responsible for undue weight gain. Looking out for that pound in time will actually save nine. Just one word of warning, however, don't advertise publicly your diet program.

Coffee Jelly.

2 tablespoons granulated gelatin
½ cup cold water
2½ cups hot strong coffee
½ cup sugar

Soak gelatin in cold water, add fresh hot coffee and the sugar. Stir until dissolved and pour into molds to set.

Mineral Oil Mayonnaise.

1 teaspoon salt — 1 egg yolk
Cayenne — 1 cup mineral oil
1 tablespoon sugar — Lemon juice
¾ teaspoon mustard — Vinegar

Mix dry ingredients and add yolk of egg. Mix well and add one-half teaspoon vinegar. Add mineral oil gradually, drop by drop at first, then more quickly, beating with egg beater. As mixture thickens thin with lemon juice or vinegar and continue adding oil. When finished mixture should be very stiff. Keep covered in the ice box.

It Appears the Young Man Was in Demand

A man applied to a famous film producer for a super's job.

"Well," replied the magnate, "I might be able to use you. See me in a month's time."

"If you want me at all," replied the actor, "you'd better put me on the pay-roll right now. There are a lot of other companies after me."

"Yes?" answered the director, "And what companies are they?"

"Well," said the actor, "there's the light company, gas company, telephone company, and—"

The director laughed and the man was put on the salary list.—Montreal Star.

Bunyan Created Lakes

Elk and Torch lakes, the beautiful finger lakes that stretch parallel for miles along the shore of Lake Michigan near Elk Rapids, date back to the days of Paul Bunyan, according to the old lumberjacks.

Lake Michigan, they say, was scooped out by the mighty Paul, who used a pair of more calorie than are needed for use by the body for its own processes and for the activity of our lives may usually be a simple matter if there are no between meal sweets and no over-indulgence in bread, butter, other fats and rich desserts with meals. Not complete avoidance!

Queen to Begger

No more striking misfortune than that of Nathalie Keschko has befallen a woman of modern times. From 1875 to 1888 she was the Queen of Serbia — famous, wealthy and beloved by her subjects. In 1931 she was a common beggar in the back streets of Paris — homeless, penniless and without a friend in the world.—Collier's Weekly.

Here's Simple Way to Ease a Cold

Two Quick-Acting, Quick-Dissolving Bayer Aspirin Tablets with a Glass of Water

The modern way to ease a cold is this: Two Bayer Aspirin tablets the moment you feel a cold coming on. Then repeat, if necessary, according to instructions in the box.

At the same time, if you have a sore throat, crush and dissolve three BAYER tablets in one-third glass of water. And gargle with this mixture twice.

The Bayer Aspirin you take internally will act to combat fever and the pains which usually accompany colds. The gargle will act as a medical gargle to provide almost instant relief from rawness and pain. It is really marvelous; for it acts like a local anesthetic on the irritated membrane of your throat.

Try this way. Your doctor, we know, will endorse it. For it is a quick, effective means of combating a cold. Ask for Bayer Aspirin by the full name at your druggist's — not for "aspirin" alone.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

SEVERAL GOOD DISHES.

WHEN fresh coconuts are in the market, try using the grated nut freely in many dishes. A salad of fruit sprinkled with two or three tablespoonfuls of grated coconut is most attractive and appetizing.

Benares Salad.

Chop rather coarsely two cupfuls of tart apples, add two cupfuls of grated coconut, one-half cupful of celery finely cut, two tablespoonfuls of chopped onion, one tablespoonful each of chopped parsley and red pepper. Serve with French dressing.

Sometime serve head lettuce with:

Blackstone Dressing.

Take four tablespoonfuls of mayonnaise dressing, the same of whipped cream, two tablespoonfuls of chili sauce, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar and a tablespoonful of finely minced onion, adding at the last a tablespoonful of cream roquefort cheese.

Cassolet.

This is a famous French dish which is both historical and appetizing. Soak overnight one quart of lima beans, in the morning bring to a boil, add salt, more water and cook until tender. Place in a casserole two cupfuls of cooked chicken or duck, add the beans, an onion, one-half cupful of strained tomato, one quart of chicken broth and a teaspoonful of kitchen bouquet. Bake one hour, uncover and sprinkle with a little minced parsley and serve.

Hot Potato Salad.

Boil half a dozen potatoes with the skins on. Peel and slice while hot. Fry thin slices of bacon and cut into small bits, using half a cupful. Pour off the fat, leaving two tablespoonfuls, stir into this one tablespoonful of flour a bit of mustard, a dash of cayenne and salt to taste. Stir until smooth, adding gradually one-half cupful of mild vinegar. Let the dressing boil, add the bacon and a small, finely chopped onion, then the potatoes. Serve very hot.

The Non-Resistank Thumb

AS HAS been learned from previous articles on the fist, or nail, point of the thumb denotes the type of will power of the individual. The will however, expresses itself in many ways. The thumb will slow you how. In this lesson we shall analyze the reverse of the inflexible or stubborn will.

The Thumb of Non-resistant Will

You will note many thumbs which indicate this kind of will power, or, rather, lack of it, in varying degree. The outstanding indication is the resilient, yielding quality of the first, or nail, joint when pressed backward toward the wrist. The lack of will power and the tendency to impulsiveness always associated with the overflexible thumb are usually found in exact ratio to the amount of flexibility.

In thumbs indicative of non-resistant will, the first joint may be either excessively long or short, but often is found with length disproportionate to that of the second joint. Its sides are either extremely straight or exaggerated in taper.

Those with first, or nail, joint of this type invariably possess wills that are readily fall in with suggestions of persons who may not always wish them well. They realize when it is too late the folly of impulse which has had its way unopposed by reflective thought.

The characteristics which mark the non-resistant will, when found in thumbs of refined structure, always signify that extravagance, where the purchase of luxuries is concerned, is almost sure to override sound judgment. In the coarser type of thumbs, indulgence in grosser material desires is apt to be a serious and always present risk.

Love, Honor and Obey

THROUGH A Woman's Eyes

By JEAN NEWTON

A STRONG MAN SHOULD NOT BE EASILY INFLUENCED

"DEAR Jean Newton:

"When in New York I saw a play in which a young married rally fine character is led astray, during his wife's absence, by a bounder of a friend who takes liberty things which the young man himself holds sacred. Entirely against his natural impulses, he is led into a flirtation which becomes a serious love affair. Throughout he at times takes the initiative, his guilt extending only to letting himself be led into trouble. He is still too fine to carry on a liason when his wife returns, and tries then to end the relationship. This results in the suicide of the girl and the man's life is smashed up. He pays a terrible price for his mistake. And, by implication, the blame is placed on the woman who led him into trouble. There is nothing to say for him, of course, but it seems to me that for a man to present a character as fine and superior, and then to have him stoop to something low simply because of someone else's influence, is untrue psychology. I think the really fine person remains true to himself in spite of bad influences. What do you think, Jean Newton?"

I am inclined to agree that we are entitled to expect something more of a really fine person than that he should do nothing common only so long as he is not tempted. A strong man does not fall over before winds that would devastate a weaker one, and a strong man or woman is expected to stand up before temptation or unworthy influences. There is an old Sanskrit proverb which says: "If a man with eyes is led by someone else, it is clear that he does not see with his eyes."

OBERAMMERGAU

"Calaphas" of Oberammergau Is a Blacksmith.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

IT IS always with joy that the traveler, wandering south through Germany, views the white flag atop the Gothic city hall of Bavaria's capital, Munich (Munchen), for the signal tells him the day is exceptionally clear and the peaks of the Alps are beckoning, in plain view some sixty miles away.

"St. Peter, the weathermaker, must be in a good mood to send so fine a day," say thousands in the city of Munich itself, and they head straight for the mountains.

A swift electric train, or a bus whirring over smooth roads, takes the traveler past the inviting Lake of Starnberg (Wurm - See), the banks of which are studded with villas and manors. White sailboats greet him from the green waters, and their background is the hazy blue mountains that loom in the distance, some 45 miles farther south.

The first approach to these gigantic monuments of Nature has the emotional impact of the immigrant's first glimpse of New York's colossal skyline. Shortly the upward journey begins, through rolling, verdant hills which make the transition gradual. Half a mile above sea level, the wanderer finds himself surrounded by the gray peaks, partly wooded mountains, and high green hills which cradle Oberammergau.

As he nears the village, the towering crag of the Kofel bids him welcome, with its huge wooden cross on top. This rocky cone must have been a weird sight one night in 1809 when the lightning had struck it, setting its trees ablaze and turning it into an immense torch.

Panorama Is the Ammer Valley.

If the wayfarer's ambition holds out, his feet will soon follow his eyes to the lofty height, and before him will unfold a panorama of the Ammer river valley. In its midst, peacefully resting, is the village which takes its name from the meandering, ice-cold stream.

"District on the upper part of the Ammer river" is the meaning of Oberammergau, a word apparently formed with no consideration for alien tongues.

Three miles down the river lies Unterammergau, and on the opposite side a place called Oberau, giving rise to a local tongue-twisting pun, akin to "picking a peck of pickled peppers":

"Ob er uber Oberau, ober or er aber uber Unterammergau, nach Oberammergau komm, wenn ich nicht," it goes, which means, somewhat ineffectively, in English, "Whether he is going to come to Oberammergau by way of Unterammergau or by way of Oberammergau, or whether he is going to come to Oberammergau by way of Oberau, I don't know."

Standing in the brisk breeze blowing over the Kofel, one scans the irregularly scattered town with its roofs small green crown of trees. Four bridges cut the silver band of the Ammer, in whose mirror are reflected the town's tallest buildings—the church and the Passion Play theater.

Little more than two years have passed since the entire town and vicinity went down on that stage, not to rise again until 1940. The hush that settled over the hall also pervaded the streets of the village which only a short while before had been resounding with the voices of thousands of people gathered there from near and far.

In this sequestered Bavarian town some 400,000 people, representing practically all the nations and creeds of the earth, rubbed elbows in the special jubilee year of 1934, when 73 performances of the play were given.

That memorable series marked the three hundredth anniversary of a tradition unbelievably dear to the village whose people for generations have been living in intimate daily contact with it.

Origin of the Passion Play.

The history of the Passion Play may be comparatively young, considering that, even before the Roman legions, Celts populated the valley. The Bavarian tribe preceded the age of knighthood, whose memento, as early as the Twelfth century, saw a church being built in Oberammergau.

Traveling merchants kept that little hamlet in intimate touch with the outside world, making it a thriving community. But then the Thirty Years' war came, and fell upon it a disastrous pestilence began to lay its grip on the settlements surrounding the village at the foot of the Kofel.

Wherever fires were seen blazing at the entrance of towns, the wanderer fled in horror, lest he also be seized by the Black Death and thrown into the raging pyre

The guards on the outskirts of Oberammergau must have missed that lone man who, after years of absence from home, yearned to be with his family again. Nothing could keep him away any longer. Sick, he staggered over the mountains at night through dark forests, and, unseen by others, joined his dear ones.

Next morning the excited beating of drums broke the news to the inhabitants that it had come, the dread disease, and Kaspar Schissler, bringer of death, lay dead.

The all-powerful Reaper began his work, and 54 persons within a short time fell a prey to him. But their doom incited in the village a spiritual awakening.

From death and despair rose the Passion Play, a memorial to those who assembled in the little parish church in 1633, making a solemn vow to produce the drama of the suffering and death of Jesus every ten years if the plague should disappear.

The old village chronicle tells us that it did, and that the year after, under the guidance of the monks of the Benedictine monastery of nearby Ettal, the villagers for the first time fulfilled their promise.

In Time of War and Inflation.

From 1870 on, every decade beheld the same religious spectacle, the same fervor and devotion. Only the faces changed. Ever the Passion Play kept growing, through times of interdictions, wars, and hardships of all kinds.

The mighty weight of a World war that took 70 men permanently from the ranks of this population of 2,600 souls to do away with the sublime legacy handed down by their ancestors for almost three centuries? True it is, 1930 remained silent and bleak. There were not enough players, no provisions.

But 1922 looked down on a busy summer, saw the Play start in May and end in September. Once again Oberammergau was proving faithful to its vow.

No German will forget those heartbreaking days of inflation and currency collapse, 13 years ago, when one had to carry one's money in a satchel for the simplest shopping. Americans attending the Passion Play were amused, even bewildered, at the buying power of their money, when a single dollar would carry them through three perfect days of pleasant living, and thirty cents would buy the best seat in the hall.

The end of the season would have discouraged any promoter not steeped in Oberammergau tradition.

The principal character then received for more than three score trying performances the sum of 20,000 marks—an amount which enabled him to buy only a pair of shoes and a few cakes of soap!

The 15,000 marks given a member of the orchestra would, he thought, carry him a long way, particularly if he tucked the money away in the savings bank. In a few days it had depreciated to zero —and that was that.

Refused a Cinema Offer.

But the players carried on, and even the unheard-of sum of one million dollars was staunchly refused by the villagers when they rejected a proposal to have their play reproduced in the movies, and elected to have it continue to be what it had been from the very outset, a local drama with a great tradition, executed by amateurs. Only there was it possible for the village in the shadow of the sheltering Kofel to preserve its quaint character.

The visitor to Oberammergau immediately notes a cleanliness and refreshing atmosphere. Each home attracts him with its tidy appearance and the hospitable spirit of the people.

In spite of the macadamized "Hauptstrasse," Main street, the rural character has not suffered. Traffic jams are caused by cows or goats rambling through the street, rather than by automobiles.

In how many other places in the world nowadays would one hear the husky voice of the town crier every now and then? After ringing his big bell, he announces the sale of veal, for example, available for the houses numbered 1 to 20. If you have lost something, he will help you find it with the vocal equivalent of a "classified ad."

The whitewashed stone walls of the roomy houses usually have stood through many years, and, as if to protect them against inclemencies, far-protruding tile roofs crown the homes. True, gray tin sometimes replaces the striking red. But, on the other hand, even today there are numbers of ancient shingle roofs, weighted down by heavy stones.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as nature intended—fail to remove impurities that poison the system when retained.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, dizziness, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, puffiness under the eyes, feel nervous, miserable—feel upset.

Don't delay! Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are especially for poorly functioning kidneys. They are recommended by grateful users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

DOAN'S PILLS

A Trio for the Younger Set

THREE more intriguing numbers than these would be hard to imagine—even in this day of rampant fashion and scintillating style! It's a trio that the younger set in The Sewing Circle will be enthusiastic about, too, for first consideration is given them in—

Pattern 1996—This excellently styled jumper dress is one the tot of six and the lass of fourteen will sing long and loud over. It is a guaranteed delight for both mother and daughter because it's the simplest thing to sew and the most intriguing frock a child ever had. The puff of the sleeves and the flare of the skirt place a pretty accent on youth. Available for sizes: 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Size 8 requires 1¾ yards of 35 inch material for the jumper and 1⅞ yards for the blouse.

Pattern 1202—There's subtle loveliness about this new dress for all occasions. It makes a grand thing of simplicity—a brilliant success of the new silhouette. Buttons, bold shiny ones, add classic chic to the back. And in the matter of sleeves there's an opportunity to choose for oneself. Sheer wool, challis, taffeta or silk crepe will be a likely material for this dress. Designed for sizes: 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 2¾ yards of 54 inch fabric. With long sleeves 2⅞ yards.

Pattern 1936—This is the season for smocks, although not the thin layer. Give it time to burn well and heat the oven, then add a full charge of coal. When the gases have burned off, reset the dampers for normal burning.

This same rule applies should the fire get very low and almost burn itself out at any time. Be careful not to smother it with too much coal. Open the ashpit damper and close the check damper. When the fire again is burning brightly, shake the grates gently until the first red glow appears in the ashpit, add a full charge of fuel, allow the gases to burn off, reverse the dampers—close the ashpit damper and open the check damper. That's the way to save fuel and cut down trips to the cellar.

Cheese Souffle in Ramekins

4 rounding tablespoonfuls of cheese, cut up.

1 heaping cuffful of fine breadcrumbs.

Full half cuffful of milk.

2 rounded tablespoonfuls of butter.

½ teaspoonful of dry mustard.

⅓ teaspoonful of salt.

Sprinkle of cayenne.

2 eggs.

Boil the breadcrumbs in the milk, and then add the cheese, then the butter, already seasoned with the salt, mustard and cayenne, then the well - beaten yolks, then the whites beaten to a stiff froth. Bake in a buttered dish for twenty minutes in a moderate oven.

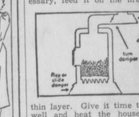
Getting Fire to Burn Briskly to Produce Quick Heat on Cold Mornings

WHAT a joy and comfort it is to get your home heated quickly on cold mornings! And how easily it can be done!

Shake the grates gently. When a red glow appears in the ashpit, stop shaking. Next, open the ashpit damper and close the check damper until the fire burns briskly. Should fresh fuel be necessary, feed it on the fire in a



A Good Judgment

THE most necessary talent in a man of conversation, is a good judgment. He that hath this in perfection is a master of his companion, without letting him see it; and has the same advantage over men of any other qualifications whatsoever, as one that can see would have over a blind man of ten times his strength. —Steele.

Doing something for someone will give you more pleasure than doing someone for something. Give it a trial. We are lent, not given to life.

DON'T RUB YOUR EYES

Rubbing your eyes gives temporary relief from irritation, but it dulls the delicate tissues, making the irritation just that much worse, much better way, as thousands have discovered, is to use a little Murine in each eye morning and evening. Murine may be depended on to relieve eyes that have been irritated by wind, dust, excessive smoking or active hobbies. Well known value in caring for the eyes. In use for 40 years. Ask for Murine at your drug store.

Believing Youth

Youth is beautiful and believing. It is a shame to exploit it.
