The Transcript. The editorial in last week's Transcript is a singular conglomeration of sentences without connection or relevancy to the subject in controversy, and seems to have been written under a constrained feeling of duty to say something having the semblance of a reply to us, without knowing what. Instead of "looking first out one eye and then another," the editor has been gazing so long and so intently with "one eye" at that very necessary article. the want of which was felt by Johnny Hook to be of more importance than a ocratic?" To which we reply: let our declaration of principles, above alluded to, speak for themselves. We attach more importance to principles than names.

"Surely," says the Transcript, "the whole body of Democrats cannot be classed as 'a few discontents and bolters'". Certainly not! A large proportion of them are identified with the Democratic-Conelse, to divert them therefrom by the cry come. Some of the best and oldest Democrats of the county were on the Democratic-Conservative ticket at the late election, and it was supported by multitudes of others, a large majority of whom- may be relied upon to stand by that organization so long as the union of those who agree on leading measures of public policy is considered necessary for the welfare and safety of the country.

respect is about equal to his vanity; and although we attempted to reason him out cluded, the editor supposes that the "dis-process, for it supplies the very elements which have been washed away by rains and is another striking example of what a distinguished individual once said, "That it was no use to attempt to reason a man out of a thing he had never been reasoned into." When we asked the ecitor to state his programme of principles, upon which he proposes to re-organize the Democratic party, he replies, "Democrats, organize!" We stated our principles for his edification, but he neither endorses nor rejects he supposed they could not see it. them, but again responds, "Democrats. organize!"
