The next fifty years will work out a

There is little to be feared from Mr.

Kentucky. Mr. Randall represents an issue that has already lost its vitality. Fifty years hence, those who read the history of these times, will wonder that a man of Mr. Rana fallacy as that a country can be made prosperous by taxing the Governor Cle

Alec McClure, of the Phila. delphia Times, paid a visit to Gov.
Cleveland last week. We make the following extracts from his letter written to the Times,—

ALBANY, December 26.

I met Grover Cleveland to day for the first time, and as I have no man to put into office, none to keep out of office, and nothing in the form of political favor that could be personally desired or accepted, there was nothing to conceal in an interview with the President-elect. Interested only in the general success of his administration by the faithful fulfillment of the pledges made by him and for him in the campaign, there was nothing to say to him that has not been already said in the editorial columns of the Times, and there was nothing said, or expected to be said, that the public could not know.

* * * * * *

GOVERNOR CLEVELAND PERSON-ALLY.

Most persons who have known Governor Cleveland only by his campaign portraits will be very agreeably disappointed in the genial frankness that brightens his face when in conversation with visitors.
He evidently has never been in the picture business himself to boom his political fortunes, and the hardened lines of his face, which are given even in the best campaign portraits, are the natural result of an unwilling subject for the artist. He plainly shows that the art of wreathing his features with smiles to make an attractive picture has been neglected in his education. All his portraits give him a heavy, obstinate appearance, indicating a sluggish temperament and a slow-moving intellectual organization; but if the photographer had caught him unawares when in conversation he would have been pictured as he really is—a delightful and ready conversationalist and with a face that bears the unmistakable impress of frankness, manliness and uncommon keenness of perception. His features are soft, his hair light auburn, his eyes bright and merry and he must at once teach all who meet him that he is a stranger to dissembling. He has abundant caution, but he does not shrink from possible misunderstanding, as Lincoln did; he does not employ words to conceal ideas, but he talks freely and pointedly on subjects he chooses to discuss and al ways means to be understood. He does not talk about the personnel of his Cabinet, for the good reason that he has made no Cabinet, and is not likely to make one, or any part of one, for weeks to come; nor does he declare any purpose or policy that would provoke antagonisms possibly require reconsideration en he becomes President; but he cusses with the utmost candor d evidently with pleasure all quesons relating to the public adminis-ration of the government. In lisning to him while at his Guberna-rial desk—interrupted now and en by subordinates, who under-nd that executive duties are not to be postponed—it is difficult to realize that he is about to assume the gravest responsibilities and wear the brightest civil honors of the world. His modest, hearty good fellowship makes him the same, save in giving graver thought to graver duties, whether citizen, Sheriff, Mayor, Governor or President.

A BUSINESS EXECUTIVE.

The one subject on which there is the most public concern touching Cleveland's coming administration is the one that he discusses with equal freedom and emphasis. I refer to the great business interests of the whole country. He is a natural business Executive. He loves business fidelity, he believes in business methods and he will faithfully fulfill his publicly repeated pledge to conduct the administration of the government on thorough business principles. He does not merely look to business administration as the limit of his duty in enforcing honest government. He carries his business statesmanship to the extent of business legislation to promote healthy and enduring business prosperity, and madcap theorists who would revolutionize and destroy will be as resolutely halted by President Cleve land as will the jobbers and profiligates who have so deeply stained every department of national au thority. He understands that tariff revision is to be one of the duties of his administration, as the national platforms of both parties have alike demanded it, but if either tariff monopolists or free-trade dreamers expect to enlist the new administration in their cause they will be disappointed. The same practical business methods that he applies to all public duties he will fitly apply to the revision of the tariff, and he will seek to do it in the most practical business-like way. He looks to the legitimate and substantial revival of all the legitimate business inter ests of the whole country as one of the foremost duties of his rule, and I shall be greatly disappointed if he does not so assure the country by his selection for Secretary of the Treasury.

THE TREASURY AND THE TARIFF.

He does not affect to underestimate the special importace of that appointment. He does not hesitate to say that however other Cabinet officers might invite criticism on points of political and even financial difference, the man charged with the portfolio to which the country must look for the harmony of revenues and industry must command the trust of the nation in his practical ability and conservative policy.
Viewing the tariff from the sensible and practical standpoint of business, the occasion clearly calls for a head of the Treasury who will bring to his task none of the dregs or resentments of faction, but who can command the considerate support of business interests in framing a business revenue law, regardless of partisan lines.

The President-elect interprets party platforms and campaign pledges after the election precisely as the terpret them at the elec-country. The present severe reduction of wages imperiously demands every possible reduction of the cost of the necessaries of life consumed by labor, and our overproduction, that now hangs like a pall over many of our most important industries, must have enlarged markets, with cheaper products to every extent consistent with protection of home labor against the ill-paid and ill-fed labor of Europe. That would be the revision of the tariff on business principles. It would be the best assurance of legitimate prosperity to both labor and capital. It is what the Chicago Democratic platform plainly teaches and it is what President Cleveland will make the policy of his administration.

THE RESCUE OF GREELY.

AS TOLD BY SEAMAN SMITH, OF THE UNITED STATES STEAMER BEAR.

Quartermasters Burke and Clark and Seaman L. C. Smith, who belonged to the United States steamer Bear, of the Greely relief expedition, arrived in the city last evening. They brought with them the costumes they wore in that region of perpetual ice and 'Dime,' the Esquimaux sledge dog, the companion of their voyage.

'We sailed from New York April 24, 1884,' said Seaman Smith, 'the Thetis following on the 1st of May and the Alert on the 10th. At Disco we shipped twenty-nine Esquimaux dogs and two drivers, and at Uppernavik, the extreme northern Danish settlement, met the Thetis. The ice delayed us a month going through Melville Bay. On the way to Cape York we raced with the English steamer whalers, who were looking for Greely in the hope of getting the reward of $25,000. No trace of the party was found at Cape York and we started for the Carry Islands. Here we found no trace of Greely, but records of the voyage of Captain Nares and a barrel of excellent rum. This was sampled by the boat's crew and found to be of excellent quality. In fact, they all got full as goats and slid down the glaciers on their backs at the risk of their necks.

'At Littleton Island, the entrance of Smith's Sound, we were nipped in the ice three days. The Bear and Thetis sailed from there to Cape Sabine, on the extreme point of which records of the Greely party were found by an ensign of the Thetis. The Bear started at once for Cocked Hat Cove, where Greely was, as indicated by the message. The steam launch under Lieutenant Colwell made the landing. A figure was seen advancing over the ice.

"Who are you?' said Chief Engineer Low.

"I am Sergeant Long,' said the emaciated wretch.

"Is Greely alive?' was the next question.

"Yes, but starving. For God's sake, give me something to eat.'

'We took the man on board the Bear at once. Commander Schley and Dr. Ames landed as soon as possible with medical supplies. The party was found in a dilapidated tent, lying in their sleeping bags, unable to stand upon their feet, which were useless. They were so weak and emaciated that they were literally nothing but human skeletons wrapped in skin. Greely was reading from a prayer-book to Private Cornell, who was supposed to be dying. As soon as he knew that it was an American expedition that had rescued him Greely said: 'I am glad to see you.' Dr. Ames took charge of the party and allowed nothing to be given them but a small teaspoonful of brandy punch at intervals and at last small quantities of food. The living and the dead were removed aboard the vessels as soon as possible. All but six bodies were recovered. They were rapped in sheeting and covered with alcohol in tanks. We stayed at Cape Sabine only eleven hours and returned through Melville Bay as fast as the ice would allow.

'One of our Esquimaux went crazy here, and, jumping on the ice, ran off as fast as his legs could carry him. Two sailors were detailed to follow and bring him back. Such running you never saw. When they captured him he turned up his toes like a turtle, expecting to be carried. But the tars didn't look at it that way. They punched him with their boarding pikes until he was glad to trot back to the ship. We arrived at St. Johns, New Foundland, July 17, where the iron coffins were received and the bodies placed in them.

Carlisle on Randall's Trip.

In relation to Mr. Randall's southern trip Speaker Carlisle said on Saturday: There is certainly nothing remarkable in the fact that a public man like Mr. Randall should visit the south or any other part of the country, either with or without an invitation. If any explanation is necessary or proper in such a case, I suppose Mr. Randall's own explanation ought to be sufficient. He is reported to have said that he is going south to make a social visit, upon the invitation of his friends: but even if he goes for purely political purposes it is no more than he has a perfect right to do. Certainly the advocates of tariff reform will welcome any opportunity that he or anybody else may give them to discuss the question before the people in any part of the country. We have nothing to lose but much to gain by open and intelligent discussion, and, in my opinion, we lost, or rather failed to secure, many votes in the late campaign by our failure to meet Mr. Blaine and his supporters squarely upon this issue in every part of the country.

BARTHOLDI'S statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World" was the other day inspected by Victor Hugo in Paris. The sculptor had invited several friends to meet the great apostle of liberty, one of whom, an Italian, on seeing Victor Hugo regarding the statue, said, "There I see two giants regarding each other," which gentle flattery was not lost on the poet, whose capacity for assimilating such diet is infinite. On taking leave, Victor Hugo once more went to the statue, and cried out, "The sea, the vast, the agitated ocean, tells of the union between two reconciled great countries." It has been suggested that these words should be carved upon the base of Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, as flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching and affecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Address, The Dr. Bosanko Medicine Co., Piqua, O. Sold by C. F. Stam.

Do You Know?

FROM the slow manner in which the TAXES are coming in I fear that the tax-payers are not generally posted as to the necessities of the case. On the first day of January all levies in my hands are due, and to meet them all taxes must be paid on or before that date. Those who fail to pay by that time will do me great injustice and themselves discredit. Please attend to this at once, and let me have the money.

You can find me at home. In Christmas week I will be at Kennedyville on Friday, 26th; Still Pond, Saturday; Chesterville, Monday; Chestertown, Tuesday, and Lynch's Wednesday.
