Who Pays The Job-Holders?

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic

If a business man or a farmer hires a worker he likes to feel that the new hand is capable of the job. He realizes that no worth-while enterprise can be well conducted unless it is competently manned.

But in the important business of manning his government, the average citizen shows less concern. That, at any rate, is indicated by recently published figures which reveal that of the many thousand persons added to the Federal payroll since 1933, fewer than one out of 100 were appointed under the Civil Service or "merit" system.

It wasn't always that way. Here's how figures present the picture of the past twenty years:

During the Wilson Administration 67.2 per cent of employes in the Executive Department of the Federal government were under the merit system. By the Coolidge Administration the proportion had risen to 74.8 per cent and four years later to 80.8 per cent. Then came the swift inflation of the public payroll during the past three years, and with it a retreat from Civil Service rules.

Today less than 58 per cent of jobholders in the Executive Department of our Federal government remain under the merit system, and in some instances new appointees replace experienced workers who won their places under Civil Service methods.

Probably these figures explain why so many groups and individuals, who realize what inflated payrolls cost the workers and earners of America, are protesting against the spoils system in the appointment of Federal job-holders.

They explain why those taxpayers demand a return to the merit system, under which a man is appointed because he demonstrates that he can do the work rather than because he can show that he knows the right politicians.

Public Office still remains a Public Trust. The citizens who pay his salary have a right to demand that their trustee, no matter what his office, demonstrate his ability to fill the job. Under the merit system they have that assurance. Under the spoils system they lack it.

Which method would the successful merchant or farmer follow if he wanted his affairs efficiently conducted? The answer is obvious. Taxpayers should demand the same evidence of competence in the men and women appointed to government jobs.

Remember, no matter who benefits by putting them on the public payroll, we, the people, foot the bill.

English Sparrows Were Imported to Eat Worms

The United States biological survey has records of 15 direct importations of English sparrows between the years 1852 and 1881.

The first importation of these birds was in 1850 when eight pairs were brought here under the auspices of Nicholas Pike and other directors of the Brooklyn Institute. They were released in Brooklyn the following spring, but they did not survive. In 1852, while on his way to assume the consul generalship of Portugal, Pike made arrangements for a second shipment to this country. Some of these birds were released as the ship entered New York harbor, while the remainder were kept in captivity until the spring of 1853, when they were liberated in Brooklyn.

Most of the sparrows were imported to this country with the idea that they would protect the shade trees from the foliage-eating caterpillars, particularly the span worm, which is the larva of the Geometrid moth, but it was soon learned that they were of little value as insect destroyers and that they were a nuisance to the community.

Sun Holes That Pierced Walls, Ancient Calendar

Casa Grande National monument's prehistoric calendar is the focus of interest to visitors to this ancient ruin in Arizona. Every one has heard of the devices for reckoning time by the sun invented in prehistoric times by the Egyptians, the ancient Britons and the Mayans. There are similar evidences of primitive astronomical study in America.

Here, through the thick adobe of the Casa Grande watch tower, two "sun holes" have been pierced, through opposite walls. Twice a year, on March 7 and October 7, the beams of the rising sun send their rays through these openings, illuminating a spot on a third parallel wall. For eight minutes the sun shines through these holes.

Now, at least 600 years since the last Indian forsook the picturesque pueblo, on those two days the sun pierces through at these points. It is believed that the "ancient people" set their planting and harvest ceremonials by those two annual dates.

Swiss Guides Have Village

Near Golden, B. C., lies a quaint little village, picturesquely situated on the slope of a mountain. Its name is Edelweiss and its inhabitants are Swiss guides who have transported their household effects and their families from their own beloved Alps to the Canadian Rockies. Each guide has special credentials of his calling from the official climbing organization in Switzerland. The need for guides in this great mountain playground can be realized when one considers that there are 630 peaks over 6,000 feet in height; that 308 of these are between 7,000 and 10,000 feet, 161 between 10,000 and 12,000 feet, and four over 12,000 feet.

Fine Japanese Blades

Among the arts and crafts of Japan the work of the swordsmith stands high, and Japanese blades are unsurpassed even by those of Damascus or Persia.

Women Turn Confidently to CHERIE NICHOLAS

Nationally Known Fashion Authority

CONCERNING styles and fashions, women desire only that information which they know is authentic. They demand accurate reporting of the new clothing trends, with candid portrayals of the described garments through truthful illustrations. They seek the correct, the latest and finest—but never the bizarre, the extreme or sensational. They wish their fashion writer to speak of smartness and good taste, of what is practical for the average woman, and [a very important item] of garments and hats they can find in their own local stores and shops.

Small wonder, therefore, that women turn confidently to Cherie Nicholas, whose illustrated fashion articles appear regularly in this newspaper. Miss Nicholas tells what the nation's foremost designers and creators of fine styles decree shall be right for the weeks to come.

You will benefit greatly through reading these authoritative articles. Tell your friends about them.

Bell Telephone Switchboards Now (1936) And Then (1878)

Top: A modern telephone switchboard such as those serving Bell System telephones today throughout the country. The "lampshade" switchboard used in Richmond, Va., in 1882 (left), and (right) the first telephone switchboard installed at New Haven, Conn., January 28, 1878.

Sixty years ago when telephone service had its origin with a conversation held between Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor, and Thomas A. Watson, his assistant, there were only two telephones in the world. Several experiments following the initial conversation held March 10, 1876, resulted in private line telephone conversations over varying distances up to sixteen miles when a railroad dispatching wire was used November 26 of that year between Boston and Salem. It was not until January 28, 1878, that a switchboard system serving eight lines and 21 telephones was installed and operated at New Haven, Conn.

Within a short time telephone exchanges were placed in operation in principal cities and towns throughout the United States and by December 31, 1880, there were 47,880 Bell Telephones throughout the nation. Telephone service here has been extended until today there are about 19,000 central offices serving over 17,350,000 telephones which is more than 50 per cent of the total telephones in the world. So universal is telephone service today that conversations may be had with more than 65 countries and geographical locations throughout the world, and it is now possible to interconnect 93 per cent of the world's telephones. Last year telephone users in the United States made 25 billion telephone calls.

Telephone service in the United States, which has set a standard for the world in efficiency, is largely the result of research and development activities of the Bell Telephone Laboratories and resulting from these activities, telephone equipment in this country, including the apparatus on the subscribers' premises, switchboards, and associated central office equipment, and outside plant consisting of poles, wires, underground conduit, and cable has reached a high degree of perfection as compared with the crude apparatus used when telephone service was first established sixty years ago.

Robin Greatest Songster

Of all the true songsters the familiar robin has one of the most extensive repertoires in the whole of the bird choir, for it can trill out a good half-hour of ringing happy tunes without repeating itself.

U. S. RENEWS FIGHT ON LOTTERY SALES

Fraud Orders Deal Blow at Use of Mails.

Washington. — Renewing its war against foreign lottery operators, the Post Office department has recently issued fraud orders against 450 residents of foreign countries, the longest individual list ever issued by the department. Notwithstanding the close watch maintained at the border by customs officers and the vigilance of post office investigators, foreign lottery tickets find a wide sale in the United States.

The results of the current offensive will be in proportion to the success of federal authorities in locating and identifying foreign distributors and in intercepting lottery material. Existing federal statutes, which carry a blanket ban on the sale of lottery tickets through the mails, are declared to be adequate. A more difficult job—one that does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Post Office department—is the prevention of the peddling of lottery tickets in the country—prohibited by the laws of most states.

Annual Sales $10,000,000.

Money sent abroad by Americans, either for the purchase of legitimate sweepstake tickets or "phonies," totals to a vast sum. The best estimates, based partly on the prize money won by Americans, place the value of ticket sales at $10,000,000 annually. In addition to the tickets sold for the Irish and other recognized sweepstakes and lotteries, thousands of counterfeit tickets have found an easy market in this country. Not only are counterfeits peddled in large quantities, but there have been many sales on fake sweepstakes. That is, the agents sell tickets, comb their "sucker" list, and then fold up completely, purchasers of tickets never hearing from them again.

The Post Office department receives a variety of information that is passed to its inspectors. Practically all the agents and distributors of tickets who use the mails reside outside the United States. When a customs inspector, a local postmaster, or any other federal official sees a large batch of letters in a single mail shipment, from the same address, suspicion is around. (Lottery agents customarily use first-class mail, in their efforts to build up a customer list).

Promptly Confiscated.

Though postal authorities have no authority to open first-class mail, they do have the authority, on suspicion, to stamp a letter: "Supposed to contain matter prohibited importation." When a letter so stamped reaches the post office of destination, the American addressee is required to open it in the presence of the local postmaster.

If the letter contains a lottery ticket it is promptly confiscated, and the Post Office department issues forthwith a fraud order against the foreign agent. The order is a double-barreled weapon. The Post Office department will not deliver letters from the foreign person or address, nor will it accept mail matter originating in the United States for names that appear on a fraud order.

Blame Henpecked Mates if Women Go Hysterical

Berlin.—"If women go hysterical their husbands are to blame in most cases, and especially the henpecked ones!"

This is the conclusion reached by Dr. G. Giehm, psychiatrist of a large sanitarium at Zepernick in the north of Berlin, as a result of an investigation of cases of hysterical women.

Writing in the German Medical Weekly, Doctor Giehm says: "As a practical consequence of this discovery the husbands should be treated and cured rather than their wives, in the first place."

Doctor Giehm found that the henpecked husbands were very sensitive, inactive, soft, over-careful, wavering men who covered up their weakness by pretending to be "kind and gentle" sympathizers with their wife's malady.

This kind of husband constitutes the greatest danger for the hysterical patients, he believes.

Best Pen Ever Found in Post Office, Woman Says

Newark, N. J.—The millennium is here, Postmaster Sinnott believes.

A woman walked into the post office, picked up a pen, dipped it in ink and began to write. As she finished, she scrutinized the pen carefully, and then walked to the inquiry window. Holding forth the pen to the amazed clerk, she said:

"Could you tell me what make this pen is? It's the best I have ever used."

This will answer all future critics of post office pens, chuckles Sinnott.

Monument Marks Grave of Friendly Sioux Chief

Chamberlain, S. D.—The first monument ever erected over the grave of a Sioux Indian chief, so far as the history of South Dakota reveals, stands on Medicine creek across the Missouri river from here. It marks the grave of Iron Nation, head of the Lower Brule, hereditary enemies of the Pawnees, Gros Ventres, Poncas and Crows.

Iron Nation was a prominent figure in the tribe for 60 years, the early ones being spent as a war chief. During his latter years he was a firm friend of the whites.

The Great North Road

The Great North road, between Auckland and Wellington in the North Island of New Zealand, was built as a military road by the British at the time of the Maori war, about 1840. An interesting part of the road passed the 1,000-foot eminence known as Taupiri hill, a sacred burial ground of the Waikato Maori kings. When the road was first built so strong was the taboo on this hill that travelers approaching the hill were required to leave the road and pass the hill by canoe on the Waikato river, resuming land travel after they were well past.
