On Wednesday these gentlemen were carried to Kennedyville, about eight miles north of Chestertown, to which place the Kent road has been completed. There they took a rough though comfortable car, used only temporarily, and ran to Townsend on the Delaware road, a distance of nineteen miles from Kennedyville, where they took the Delaware train for Wilmington and arrived at home the asme day. We regret that the condition of the public roads, occasioned by the late rains, prevented them from examining our lands and improvements, but we learn that they have been furnished with every data necessary to lead them to just and proper conclusions upon the object of their visit.
