to his race, to vote on that day. This election is not an ordinary one; it is not past! whether A or B shall represent us in Congress, but it is to determine whether the white race shall rule in the administration of the government, or be ruled by the African. There is no middle ground. The schools, the jury box, the public assembly, the saloons, the car, the stage coach, the hotel, are all to be equally free and open to the negro at all times and occasions, or the distiction is to be kept up as formerly, as the fathers established it, and as we have been trained and educated. He who made different races of men never designed such an affiliation and amalgamation of the Caucasian and African as the radical faction are now attempting to force upon the country; their laws of Providence and of their own ininstincts, should arouse to action every who respects the lessons and examples, the teachings and history of those who fought for and established the government.
