DENTON, SATURDAY MORNING, Feb. 3, 1877.

The Electoral Bill Passed.

The bill, prescribing the manner of counting the disputed electoral votes, which was reported to Congress on the 20th of last month by the joint committee, and which has since passed in the Senate by 47 yeas to 17 nays, and the House by 191 yeas to 86 nays, has been approved by the President and is now a law. The passage of this bill is certainly a great triumph of moderation and patriotism over narrow-minded partisans. Our ablest jurists and wisest statesmen have predicted that the severest trial of our American institutions would come whenever the presidential election should turn on a few disputed votes. The time for such a trial has come, but fortunately for the country, the patriotic elements of both parties have come to the front and devised a plan which, we have no doubt, will solve the present difficulty and peacefully settle it. The result, as ascertained by the Electoral Commission, will be accepted and acquiesced in without a murmur by the friends of both candidates.

The Schoolmaster at Home.

The schoolmaster, who has been "abroad" so long, has got back at last. He may be found at St. Michaels, in the sanctum of the Comet & Advertiser. In virtue of his vocation, he has kindly taken us in hand. Our article headed "Words, Words," doesn't suit him. "If the use of the word romping in the sentence quoted is wrong," he says, "the criticism is not less so. That evidently means that romping is rude playing by a boy and a girl, and that a girl cannot romp with a girl any more than she can jilt a girl, or flirt with a girl." Begging his pardon, that is just what it doesn't mean. Had we meant that, we should have said, It takes a girl to romp with. But we said, "It takes a girl to romp." A girl can romp with a boy, or with another girl; two girls can romp with each other, and a dozen girls can romp with one another; but a boy can't romp at all, any more than he can flirt; he can only be romped with. Boisterous play is out of keeping with femininity, and therefore, when engaged in by a girl, is called romping; boisterous play is not out of keeping with masculinity, and therefore, when engaged in by a boy, is not called romping. This is our answer to our schoolmaster's question, why, when a boy and girl are playing boisterously together, "doing precisely the same thing," the girl should be said to be romping, and the boy not? He might as well ask why, since a boisterous girl is called a tomboy, a boisterous boy shouldn't be called a tomgirl.

Our language in regard to sever was too broad. There is a technical use of it in law, in the sense of divide into parts, and it is in this technical sense that Milton used it of the married state of Adam and Eve. There is also a figurative use of it in the same sense by Lord Bacon. But in the untechnical literal use of the word, we think the Comet will look in vain, outside of newspaper English, for such a phrase as "sever in twain."

Having thus done battle chivalrously for two of his contemporaries our luminary sends his searching glance into our sanctum, and finds, or thinks he finds, some half dozen "motes" floating, not in the sunbeams, nor in the moonbeams, but in the beams of his nucleus. Here they are, chipped off from the first column of our third page; or rather, here is where they are said to be. We leave out the one about the "Art publishing House," because that is not ours, as the notices of Scribner, and St. Nicholas, we suppose, are not the Comet's, seeing we have met them, word for word, if we mistake not, in "our contemporaries;" but here are the other five:—

"The Dr. invited the members of the band in the hotel"—for, "into the hotel."

"Several of our young ladies happened in a lawyer's office"—for, "happened into." These are certainly "motes;" not very big ones; not near so big as the three "beams;" but still, big enough; in fact, too big; and we are beholden to the Schoolmaster for taking them out of our eye: We will presently do the like turn to him, in the way of "beams." But first to the three remaining "motes":

"Not having been able to get the facts, we shall for the present refrain," etc.

"Will not probably exceed."

"On Monday next, Rev. H. W. Beecher delivers a lecture."

We hardly suppose our luminary refers to the omission of "the" before "Rev.," seeing it is well nigh universal. We grant it is not elegant; but then neither is he elegant whose title is thus docked of its prefix. But as we are bound to give the devil his due, we suppose we are bound to give the flesh its due also. If that is not, as we suppose it is not, one of the "motes," where are they? We have looked for them with a forty-million magnifying power, and can't see them. We do not believe they would be visible even to Minutius Specius Spectacus, who measured the great toe nail of the Colossus of Rhodes, and, finding it a quarter of an inch too long, came to the conclusion that the Colossus was not "what it was cracked up to be." Will our erratic luminary be so good as to concentrate the rays of his nucleus and his train—it will take them both—on the aforesaid "motes"? We promise to see them if they are visible,

"But optics sharp it takes, I ween,
To see what is not to be seen."

Like Hector, we cry for light; "light though we perish!" Let it be forthcoming. Meanwhile, we will pluck a beam or two out of our luminary's eye:

"If the Fishery Force can not do something to at least lessen these violations of law," etc.

Where is the authority, ten years old, for putting a word or a phrase, between the infinitive and its preposition? Let us strangle the imp before he comes of age, for then it will be too late to "count him out."

"The fortunate groom is a native of Kent county, was subsequently a resident of Baltimore, [subsequently to his being a native of Kent county! and yet he is still, and will be, always, a native of Kent county, and he has ceased to be a resident of Baltimore; for the narrative proceeds,] and came to this town a year or two ago, at the head of the mercantile house," etc. Who saw him come to town at the head of a mercantile house?

This will do for the present. To take too many "beams," especially so big ones, out at once might inflame the eye of our luminary.

Departed Greatness.

Death is the common fate of all animated things, the consumtion of earthly affairs which each being must expect, and yet its coming is always a shock. Especially is this so when some exalted personage, upon whom the eyes of the public were fixed, is stricken dow. Although the sense of bereavement may be confined to a few, yet the whole community feels a pensive interest in the event, and details of the career of the deceased are eagerly souhht for. One by one the great personage of our times disappear from the scene of their fame. Astor, the great real-estate owner, has gone; Stewart, the dry-goods prince, no longer stands the foremost in the marts of trade; Vanderbilt, the railway king, now rests from his labors, and on last Saturday a being of even greater magnitude in the world than anyone of them, attractive admired and famous, expired while in the presence of a large concourse of visitors. A series of strong convulsions, a short, vehement struggle and "the only white whale in the capacity in the world" was no more. The cause of his sad demise is as yet surrounded by mystery; nor, indeed, had it been observed that he stood in need of medical treatment. Whether his pulse had been felt or his tongue inspected we are not informed; but his entertainers, the proprietors of the acquarium, had noted nothing unusual in his behavior until last Saturday even, when instead of disportiong himself in his task, as was his wont, he moved about in an erregular, erratic way, and ever and anon lash the water into a foam, his violent activity ending in the consequence of death. Eminent physicians are in consultation over the remains, and it is proposed to hold an autopsy of the remains to determine the cause of death. Meanwhile conjectore is busy and has already hit upon an explanation of his demise. It is argued that continued mental depression has destroyed the tone of his system and superinduced the fatal illness He died of shame. He was extensively advertised and visitors come to the aquarium expecting to see a monster of the deep, and beheld only a litt'e six-foot creature of a moldy white color, whom no possible effort of the imagination could elevate into the mighty animal whose ponderous blows can crush the sides of a whale-boat. He was not even as big as a sea-lion, who used to look at him from his rocky grotto and snort out his contempt. These things used to prey upon his mind, and combined with the melancholy produced by solitary confinement in a tank, were such crushing burdens to one of his sensitive disposition that he finally expired beneath their pressure.—Balto. Gazette.

Gov. Nicholls, of Louisiana.

The unhappy political and commercial condition of Louisiana renders interesting everything concerning the brave men who are endeavoring to steer her through the hideous surf-brakers in which she is floundering—In such connection the Upper Marlboro Prince Georgian furnishes some particulars of Francis T. Nicholls, who has been inaurated as the Democratic Governor of Louisiana, and is bravely endeavoring to fill his high office in spite of Packard and federal bayonets. Gov. Nicholls's father, Thomas Nhicolls, was born and raised in Upper Marlboro', Prince George's county, Md., and was a nephew of Col. David Craufurd and Mrs. Sarah Forrest, prominent and wealthy citizens of that county some thirty-five years ago. Thomas Nicholls migrated to Louisiana, taking with him three children, Patsey, David and Thomas. Patsey Nicholls becmae Mrs. Morse, representing New Orleans district in Congress several times, and was subsequently sent by President Buchanan as U. S. minister to Venezuela. David Nicholls was a midshipman, and was aid to Com. Perry at the battle of Lake Frie. He was with the commodore when transferred from the flagship in a small boat to the Niagara under fire of the British line-of-battle ships; and Thomas Nicholls is the father of the present Governor of Louisiana. "The old Maryland line" preserves its true and pure blood, even in the perilous and turbid political atmosphere of down-trodden Louisiana, and Gov. Nicholls shows himself a worthy son of Maryland ancestry. During the late civil war Gov. Nicholls commanded a regiment in Gen. Dick Taylor's brigade, and lost an arm in the battle. So soon as able to report for duty he was promoted to the rank of brigadier general, and lost a leg. When convalescent he tendered his services in the field but the authorities diclined to subject him to further exposure, and assigned him to duty in command of the military post at Lynchburg, Va., then one of the most important strategic positions in that region, because of the immense commissary resources that were there centred for use of the Confederate army.—Balto. Sun.

Congressman Lamar.

The Philadelphia Times of a recent date has the following to say about the splendid orator, Mr. Lamar, of Mississippi:

A face that might have come out of one of Vandyke's pictures, and needs only the setting off of wide-brimmed, plumed hat and velvetdoublet to make the vraisemblance complete; strongly emphasized features, a heavy, dark moustache, which would be fierce if it had an upward curl, but sloping downward is gravely romantic; pointed beard on chin, between brown and black, worn so long that it falls down over the coat collar; a lofty forehead; form of medium height and well-shaped save for the stooped shoulders: a so ber suit of borad-sloth—the care with which the coat is buttoned and its yelcollar revealing temperate love of dress in its owner. This is Lucius Quitius Curtius Lamar, of Mississippi, Representative now and Senator to be after the 4th of march. He is the finest orator in the House, and yet he very rarely speaks. He is of French ancestry as one can plainly see, for his face never came from English parentage.—Intensely Southern in his political instincts, Lamar is nevertheless broad, liberal and national in his views. In all the Southern delegation no one is less a Bourbon—no one is more sensible and progressive. Very few men in Congress are as well educated or as well read in standard and current literature. Finally he he has a good quality that comes with his Erench blood and too rarely found in Americans of middle age—he is gallant toward women and fond of their society.—Phila. Times.

Ben Hill's Election.

The election of Ben Hill to the United States Senate from Georgia will give much satisfaction to the people of all sections irrespective of party divisions. The opposition to the successful candidate came from the extreme Southern element, and grew out of the conservative position occupied by Mr. Hill on questions that have for the past two years, and notably since the Presidential election, agitated the country. The qualities which won for Mr. Hill the respect and admiration of the best citizens of the Republic made extreme and violent partisans his enemies. His defeat in the Senatorial struggle would have been the triumph of the radical element in the North, as well as of the fire-eating element of the South, and his election therefore takes the character of a national victory.

The United States Senate has secured some valuable new members through the recent elections. Mr. Lamar was chosen Senator from Mississippi to the next Congress some months ago. Mr. Blaine, Mr. Hoar, Judge Davis and Mr. Hill are Senators whose influence will be felt, and whose influence will be felt, and whose presence will add to the ability and dignity of the body. The freedom from partisanship, and the calm, independent minds of at least four of the number may become of especial value should there be, as some persons anticipate, a reconstruction of political parties.—N. Y. Herald.

Very Useful to Every One.

In no other way can a person get back so large a profit for very little money, as to expend it in learning what to do, when to do it—in other words, to have his brains help his hands. Here is one way to do this: The small saving or extra production of less than half a cent a day, or 3 cents a week, will now procure a large, beautiful, cheap Journal, for all of 1877, splendidly Illustrated, with over 600 fine original Engravings, and over a Thousand Columns of the very best, plain, practical, trustworthy information about the every day in-door and out-door work and comfort of every home, in Country, Village, and City. This information is not prepared by mere scribblers, but by a large force of intelligent working men and women, who know what they write about, and they are assisted by many other, who furnish information from their own practice and observation. Such a Journal is the American Agriculturist, so named because started 35 years ago as a rural journal, but since greatly enlarged and improved to suit the daily wants of every man, woman, and child in City, Country, and Village—for the Farmer and Gardener, the Merchant and Mechanic, the Professional Man—indeed, all classes. It is packed full of useful information that every one ought to have. Many single hints and suggestions will repay more than a whole year's cost of the paper. Its original engraved plans for buildings and improvements, with details of cost, etc., and common-sense directions, are worth far more than a majority of the costly works on architecture. Great care is exercised to have every line in the paper reliable. Its constant, persistent, and full exposure of a multitude of Humbugs and swindles, are alone worth far more than its cost, and has aved to its readers and to the country illions of dollars that would have one into the hands of sharpers. The epartments for Housekeepers and hildren are very useful and entertaining. In short, the American Agriculturist is full of good things, and ought o be in every house in the land. The irculation is so large that the publishers can supply it at little above the ost of printing paper—or $1.60 a year, ent post-paid; or four copies $5.40. Take our advice and send your subscription for 1877 (Vol. 36) to ORANGE JUDD COMPANY, 245 Broadway; New York. You will find it pay, and pay well.
