THE MILKING-MAID.

Where milky kine were lowing.

Her air was frank and simple.

She milked into a wooden pai And sang a country ditty,-An innocent fond lover's tale,

That was not wise nor witty

Pathetically rustical, Too pointless for the city. As true as church-bell ringers, Unless she tapped time with her feet

Or squeezed it with her fingers; Her clear, unstudied notes were sweet As many a practised singer's. I stood a minute out of sight,

Stood silent for a minute. To eye the pail, and creamy white The frothing milk within it,-To eye the comely milking-maid, Herself so fresh and creamy.

'Good day !'' she said, with lifted head

The grave cow heavy-laden;
I've seen grand ladies, plumed and silked,
But not a sweeter maiden; No, not a sweeter, fresher maid Than this in homely cotton, Whose pleasant face and silky braid
