"Democrats, to the Rescue!"

We notice with much satisfaction the strong and growing sentiment which appears to find frequent and forcible utterance among the thinking men of the Democratic party disavowing all alliance with rings and cliques within the party, and resisting every encroachment or combination upon their part with broadsided vigor. And we heartily endorse the manly sentiments of our valued correspondent, "Victory," when he says: "To the winds with the petty rings and factions. They are in the way!" They are indeed "in the way"—a "thorn in the flesh" of our party existence, festering and producing a most loathesome sore. We must cut them severely, and remove them entirely or our party life will be endangered. How to do this most effectually is the problem to be solved by the honest, thinking men of the party.

If we could fairly combine the honest efforts of the party against the cliques and clique men we should no doubt very speedily spike their guns and silence them for good. But the trouble is to find the game, the after trouble of killing it would be a small affair. Cliques work under cover of the darkness. Broad day-light is poison and death to them. Honest men on the other hand work openly, in the face of the people. They fight like brave soldiers on the open field, while the enemy posts its sharp-shooters in ambush all around them. What chance have honest men in such a fight! The only plan is to mark the ring-leaders. They are known—well known. Dash them on all occasions. Throw them overboard. Allow them no control in the party. Suspect and "cold-shoulder" every suggestion, proposal, move or measure brought forward, advocated or in any way favored by them. It is the only method to fight them—fight them clear out of the party, or force them to behave themselves while they stay in it. "Rule or ruin" is their motto; let us apply it as a wholesome remedy to themselves.

Let us not, however, be understood as disfavoring honest ambition among the rank and file of the party. We want our "honest men to the front;" let them come. We have no objection to an office being sought by an honest man in an honest way. But we shall always be found opposing chronic office-seekers—the pets of rings—the offspring of a faction. The people know who they are, and let us watch them closely, until after our next election. Let us accept the wholesome warning which "Victory" gives, and guard against their combinations.

The Greenbackers.

The Greenback Party of Pennsylvania held its late convention at Altoona, one of the high positions on the great railroad which binds the Atlantic and Pacific states to each other with a chain of iron. If the place of meeting was intended to be symbolical of the position of the party whose interests they assembled to discuss, then those who look upon that party hopefully will think it well chosen. Its leaders in council were fanned by mountain breezes, and thus enabled to keep cool while people elsewhere were sweltering. Again their lofty location helped them to look down upon surrounding objects and to see things at a distance: two important conditions of success in such a gathering. There seems to have been indeed the usual amount of claptrap proclamations of opinion, and talking for buncombe, which of course should be suffered good naturedly by a patient public; but, nevertheless, there are propostions laid down in the platform of that party, and principles enunciated in its discussions through the press and in its public assembles, which ask the grave and deliberate attention of the nation, and should have it.

We confess to a liking for the way in which some of the leaders of this party seem disposed to manage its affairs. They evidently rely upon argument, and not upon party drill to carry their opinions. Henry Carey Baird, who was a candidate chosen for their chief office at the late convention, is, if we are correctly informed, a plain man of business in Philadelphia who has never had any ticket in the lottery of politics, nor desired any. If he has held political office at any time we are not aware of it. Yet in his hours of leisure he has grappled with several of the great issues of the times and written more and some think abler pamphlets on them than any man of his day. And here we can not forbear to say, that we think this gentleman has set an example to the practical business men of the country (of all parties) which is altogether worthy to be followed. His life is not entirely given to his own affairs. He devotes a portion of it to his country.

And if men of thought in our crowded cities can spare time for this kind of work, why may not those who live on our farms and in our towns and villages? They are the men who should prepare themselves to lead the opinions and mould the policy of the nation. The great agricultural class has a right by virtue of its numbers, [illegible] should have [illegible] greater right [illegible] of its qu[illegible] govern this Repub[illegible] it was so once, when the breath of its political life was breathed into the nostrils of the nation, and the true inspiration given it from such places as Ashland, and Marshfield and Montecello, or—to go to the top at once—Mt. Vernon. The men who presided over and ennobled these rural homes were fond of farm-life. George Washington would not have exchanged his little kingdom at Mt. Vernon, and what he called his "agricultural amusements," for the empire of the Russias; and was with difficulty prevailed upon to do it, for what he deemed a much higher place, the Presidency of the United States.

It is a sin and a shame that our theories of political economy should be left at the mercy of party demagogues on the one hand, or retired students and college dreamers on the other. There is no science in which the practical and theoretical elements so need to be combined, that they may qualify and balance each other. There is no department in which practical business men, if they be also men of thought, can do a more important work both for themselves and others. What is political economy? In what does it differ from domestic economy, or in other words, good house keeping? A key which alone can unlock the difficulties of the latter is this: that the expense of the family shall always be met by its income, so that the estate may remain intact. That rule will carry any household safely through. And why should it not do as much for that larger household? Why should not those who manage—by fair means or by foul—to gather to themselves the incomes of the country, be made to pay its expenses also; that, in the one case as in the other, the principal, or real property, of the household—national or domestic—shall not be reduced.

Maryland has a Man.

These hot days our city exchanges are employing their surplus space in the task of bringing out candidates for the Presidency. The New York Sun has of late been particularly active in this respect. This paper and its correspondents have proposed many able and influential men as possible candidates. We are pleased to find the name our worthy and able statesman, William Pinkney Whyte, justly, though briefly, extolled in one of the leading northern journals by a correspondent who names him for the Presidency. The writer says: "Among the names of the many distinguished men of the Democratic party who would be fit and proper nominees for the next Presidency permit me to include that of the Hon. William Pinkney Whyte of Maryland.

The record made by this gentleman as United States Senator and as Governor of Maryland gives ample evidence of his possession of all the qualities that would dignify and adorn the Presidency.

A man of first rate executive ability, a profound jurist a stanch Democrat, without being a bitter partisan, he has always secured the respect and good will even of his political adversaries, while upon all national questions his disinterested patriotism and the conservatism of his views have ever lifted him above the behests of party clamor.

He is a man of dauntless courage, and if nominated and elected you may be very certain no Electoral Commission jugglery would ever prevent his taking the place that rightfully belonged to him."

A FREAK of tornado at Reno, Nev., is thus described by the Gazette: "Moorman Cutter started out with a half gallon of whiskey to take to his sick mother. He was found some hours afterward lying behind a fence on the hill. He said that he stopped around a corner to fix a cork in the jug, and while he was taking the measure of the orifice of the jug a tremendous wind came down on him. It sucked the liquor clean out of the jug, blew it down his throat, and turned the jug inside out. He could remember nothing more."

MR. CYRUS W. FIELDS thinks that there has been a special "Divine Providence" superintending his great enterprises by which he has amassed his immense wealth. "In the first place," says Mr. Fields, speaking of his elevated railways, "the price of iron went down to a fabulously low figure. Labor was a drug in the market, and we could hire four men for the price of one. Then the Almighty gave us an open winter the entire season." Mr. Fields believes a good deal in a divine providence which makes the rich richer at the expense of the poor.

THE trial of Freeman, the Pocasset child slayer, is likely to be interesting both to believers and unbelievers in the Old Testament and the account of Abraham's sacrifice. Freeman, it is said, will refuse to employ counsel, and should the State appoint counsel to represent him, he will interrupt him, should he try to smooth over the facts in order to make a good defence. It is said that both Freeman and his wife yet think that they did perfectly right in imitating Abraham, and it remains to be seen what a Puritan jury will think about it.

THE yellow fever fear is subsiding. Only eight new cases were reported last Wednesday. There are no new developments of importance in New Orleans, but the alarm among residents continues. The barricade of quarantine regulations is closing the Cresent City, and within a few days, if there should be new cases, escapes by the usual avenues of travel would be almost impossible.

Telephonic Preaching.

Sermons by telephone are among the newest extras added to the accommodations of current religion. The method is to place the transmitter or microphone inside the pulpit, or else plumply on the desk, whence a wire takes the discourse—and, for that matter, the prayers hymns, and other services—to the house of the invalid or indisposed person, who cannot attend, but desires the words of his (or, more likely her) favorite preacher. On one occasion, by way of experiment, a service was telephoned from the Square Congregational Church, Halifax, England, to Manchester a distance, by wire, of 36 miles. For an ordinary parish, therefore, the telephone is an entirely practicable institution. To be sure, it may somewhat distract the devotion of a congregation, and the abandon of a preacher, to see a scientific instrument before him, for bottling and retailing sounds: still, we become accustomed to the ear trumpet which is sometimes brought to bear just out of range of the preacher's gestures. But though the new sensation of mingling the service of the sanctuary with an experiment in science may for a time give popularity to the pulpit telephone, and cause even some who might go to church to gather instead at the other end of the wire, this latter result will hardly last after curiosity is once appeased. There are pleasures of sight as well as sound to the occupants of pews, and advantages of actual presence that cannot be duplicated by telephone.

"Who Ate Roger Sherman?"

A short time ago as Joseph Caxon was engaged in removing the bodies from the old almshouse graveyard at Hagerstown, he observed that a large apple tree, which stood at the head of the grave he was working at, seemed to fill the grave full of roots. He removed the remains carefully, and discovered the following curious fact: A large root had entered the grave from the head and formed a large knot or enlargement under the skull. From thence it passed down the human skeleton to the shoulders, where two branches followed the arms even to the finger tips. The main body of the root followed the spine to the hips, when it separated and the bone of the legs and feet were distinctly mapped out by the roots. If removed intact the root would have very closely resembled the frame of the human body. The causes assigned for this singular fact are that decaying humanity imparted life and vigor to the tree through its feeders, the roots, and they fallowed naturally the source of their nourishment. Some years ago the grave containing the remains of Roger Sherman was opened, when it was discovered that the root of an apple tree, which stood near by, had entered it in the manner above described and took the shape of a human skeleton. The fact was extensively published under the caption "Who ate Roger Sherman?"—True Democrat.

Fight of the Factions.

A POLITICAL ROW, WHICH RESULTS IN A BROKEN HEAD OR TWO.

ANNAPOLIS, July 30.—One of the most exciting and disgraceful scenes ever enacted at a political gathering in Maryland was witnessed in the Anne Arundel County Democratic Convention, which met here yesterday to nominate a legislative and county ticket. There were two factions, one led by Senator Bannon and the other by Gen. Bond. Soon after the body had been called to order, Bannon, without putting the negative vote, declared Mr. Robinson chairman. A scene of intense excitement ensued. Bond leaped on the platform and attempted to seize the gavel, but Bannon declined to yield and declared Robinson chairman pro tem. The war of the leaders was then taken up by the delegates on the floor, and a free fight ensued, lasting for ten minutes, during which one man was struck and badly cut on the head with an iron bar, and several others were roughly handled. The Bond wing finally withdrew, and two conventions were organized, both of which nominated full tickets and adjourned.

MARRIED ON HORSEBACK.—The Marlboro Gazette says: "Quite a novel wedding took place on Tuesday of last week on the public road near Lyon's creek, in Calvert county. The contracting parties were Mr. Horace Tell and a Miss Jones, both of Anne Arundel county. The officiating minister, Rev. Mr. Shoat, of Calvert county, was requested by the groomsman to start from his home at 7 o'clock on the above named morning, and he would do likewise, and the point on the road where they would meet should be made memorable by a novel wedding. This arrangement was carried out, and the bride and groom on horseback met the reverend gentleman, and, in the public road, seated on horsebacks, under the sheltering branches of a wide-spreading oak, the happy couple were made man and wife."

CHARLES H. STILLY tramped into Reading, Pa., a few days ago, hungry ragged and disconsolate. A year before, he had made the people of that city stare at his ways of squandering $20,000 that had been left to him. On the latter visit, he begged a meal at the hotel in which he once occupied the finest apartments, and slept in a barn where he had previously kept his horses.
