POET'S CORNER.

[From the Mauch Chunk Courier.]

JOE BUNKER'S VISIT TO MAUCH CHUNK.

Did you ever go up to Mauch Chunk?
By jings—how the water does roar;
I went 'tother day with my trunk—
The path was too narrow for more.

As I got jist up into the Gap
A thinkin' of overshot mills,
A rock tumblin' down hit me slap,
And dispers'd me clean into the rills.

By gaully—I holler'd right out,
'Oh, give a poor devil a hint,
And not when he's walkin' about
The river, to knock him clean in't.'

Well, onward I started full swig,
And gave me a touch of the cramp,
If I seed not a ditch full as big
As the ditch through father's spruce swamp.

Oh—thunder and smoke, then I cried,
Them troughs dragg'd by horses beat me,
They're longer and sartin as wide
As Scudder's great Buttonwood tree!

And full of sich rotten black stuff
Dug out, as they said, of the ground,
That I guess'd they had went low enough
For the sinders within Satin's bound!

Excuse that are line if you please—
But by hoky! my hair 'gan to raise
When I saw sich big mountains as these,
And they talk'd of their patent railways.

You are pretty cute fellers I thought
To ride all your coal upon rails,
When they'd been so much easier bought
By three or four dozen milk-pails!

But give it all up as moon shine,
When I'd got on the top of the hill,
And the mules haul'd me up to the mine,
The long string of wagons to fill.

Now says I 'let us have a good ride,'
But oh—Jehu! I went like a bolt,
Or thunder and lightnin' beside,
Or Eclipse or a wild Arab colt!

'Keep still my good hearty,' said Jim,
The booby who guided the pole;
But I wish'd that old Clootie had him,
With his mules and his cargo of coal.

Jist think of a mile in a minute,
Or two—if you will, my dear friend,
And a car, and yourself box'd within it,
And no 'whoa' to the fool at the end.
Would you yell, would you swear, or keep cool?
I merely laid flat as a strap—
Expecting to land in that pool
The Lehigh, or fly through the Gap!

But they stopp'd!—and half dead I crept out;
Din'd at Kimball's and read the Courier,
And agreed on this terrible route,
You could ride to the moon thrice a year.

ANECDOTES OF THE BATTLE OF NAVARIN.

LIFE ON BOARD A MAN OF WAR.—From a book under this title published in London, and confined principally to the events preceding, pending and following the battle of Navarino, we find in the London Literary Gazette the following extracts.

The following scene on board the Genoa, after the fight, is very forcible!

"I found some of the men engaged in burying Rooney, the only man killed who had a wife aboard. Mrs. Rooney sat on the truck of a gun, her face hid in her hands. As they proceeded to put him overboard, she started up, and told them to stop a few minutes; she then went down upon her knees, and, stroking back his curly hair, patted his cheek exclaiming, "Poor Jem! poor Jem!" Then clasping her hands together, she rose, but immediately dropped down senseless upon the deck. Four of the men carried her to her birth, while I bent my way to my own mess. The deck was quite dark, save the glimmering light of a candle here and there, stuck in a purser's lantern suspended from the battens. When I came to my birth I was welcomed by the whole of the mess more like a brother than a shipmate: hit this day made us all brothers; feuds and animosities were buried in forgetfulness; and many who had entertained bitter hatred at one another would be seen shaking the hand of friendship together. I took my seat, and commenced looking about to see if any of the old familiar faces were missing: but it was difficult to recognize my mess-mates in the curious group of ferocious-looking banditti that surrounded me. They were all dressed in shirt and trowsers, with handkerchiefs round their heads, and pistols and cutlasses at their belt. Their faces were black with smoke and gunpowder, and several who had been wounded with splinters had large plasters about their cheeks.—To heighten the effect, gleams from the blazing Moslem vessels cast every now and then a red glare into the birth. I found, on inquiry, that two of my messmates besides Morlitt were killed. We talked of the behaviour of the ship's company, and the probable consequences of the battle. Tom Elliot came down with a monkey of wine, and said, 'D'ye see, shipmates, the purser's steward has filled the monkey up to the brim! now, come, we shan't be sogers. Hand us the tot from the inside there, and let us all drink round.' We drank to the memory of our good old captain, and all who fell on this glorious day. I found the wine revive me greatly, and soon went on deck to have a view of the scene of battle, by the light of the Turkish fleet, that was blazing in all quarters."

The following is also characteristic:—

"The Turkish vessels still continued to burn, and the discharge of their heated guns, at intervals, sounded like minute guns lamenting the devastation of the day; while the gentle breeze that began to blow at night, as it whistled through the tattered remains of our rigging, seemed to mourn for the brave men who had fallen, and who now lay 'full many a fathom deep' in the blue waters. About ten o'clock I heard a melancholy voice right under our stern, crying, 'Ali! Mahomet!' Jack Mitchell and I rose, and, looking under the stern, we saw two Turks clinging to the rudder and sending forth their ejaculations for God and Mahomet to save them. We could offer them no assistance, for strict orders had been given not to allow any of the enemy to come aboard. The poor fellows seemed as if they could not hold on long. In about five minutes one let go, and soon after the other, both sinking in the water with the half articulated cry of Ali! Ali!' Mitchell returned and stretched himself on the deck, saying, with an affected air of indifference, that he 'would be blessed if he would be again disturbed in his snoose for all the b——y Hometans in Christendon.'"

Another affecting extract, and we have done.

"The morning before we reached the island of Sicily, Captain Moore, of the marines, who had been wounded in the action of the 20th, died; his wound, which I believe was in the thigh, having mortified. He was an old man, and as much beloved by his own men as the commodore had been by us. A coffin was made, perforated with holes, and the body deposited in it along with shot and bags of wet sand, to make it sink. It was laid, covered by a union jack, on a grating, fixed against the ship's side, the outer edge of which was raised to a level by two ship ropes held fast by two men, so that at the word being given, by letting go the slips, the grating dropped like a hinged door against the side, and the coffin would fall into the sea. The order was given to toll the bell, and the ship's company and officers, in full uniform, mustered, all hats off, on the upper deck, as near as they could to the gangway; the fore and main chains were crowded, and all stood in respectful silence to see the coffin consigned to the deep. A file of marines was ranged on the gangway, to fire three vollies over their commander. The chaplain commenced the funeral service for a person buried at sea. 'Not a sound was heard,' but the breaking of the water on the weather-bow; while the solemn voice of the chaplain rose at intervals, and seemed to be borne along on the winds.—When he came to the passage. 'We commit his body to the deep,' the slips were let go, and the coffin sunk into the white-topped wave that ran under the lee of the ship. The marines fired three rounds over him; and this concluded the funeral of Captain Moore, who was buried nearly opposite the cloud-capt top of Mount Etna."

DEAF AND DUMB.

The schools for educating this unfortunate class of human beings, now in operation, amount to nearly a hundred. There are in Spain, one; in Italy, five; Portugal, one Switzerland, four; Wirtemberg, three; Bavaria, one; Prussia eight; rest of Germany, nine; Denmark, two; Sweden, one; Russia, one; Great Britain, sixteen; United States, six; France, twenty-six; Holead, four. The king of Denmark his decreed, that "every deaf and dumb infant born in his kingdom shall receive the education necessary to render him a useful member of society."

Everlasting Candles.—Abraham Newlight, lately from Greece, informs the public that he has invented a new article in the tallow chandlery line which he flatters himself will be patronized by all who wish to economise light, in this gloomy state of the manufacturing and commercial world it is called the everlasting candle, and if properly used, the subscriber warrants it never to burn out. Information concerning the manner of using it may be had of 8 N. at the office of Gas Company or of the candle snuffer at the Theatre.

N. B.—Those who have already purchased these candles, will be careful not to light them. [N. Y. Courier.

The Portsmouth (Ohio) Times of the 21st ult. says: We expect in 1836, if we should live so long, to see gentlemen and ladies who had breakfasted in Baltimore, on the same day, at evening, snugly sipping their tea in the cabin of a steamboat on the Ohio river.

DR. CHAPMAN'S

ANTI DYSPEPTIC OR SOUR

STOMACH PILLS.

INDIGESTION or Sour Stomach is acknowledged by Medical Writers to be a complaint of stubborn kind, at all times very difficult of cure. This is sufficiently illustrated in the disappointment of those who unfortunately suffer under it, as they for the most part find that, after having tried many things to little or no purpose, they are at last obliged to use, for perhaps the remainder of life, such articles as can at best but palliate the disease.—Under such circumstances any medicine capable of removing the complaint must surely be an article highly deserving the attention of all those who are afflicted with it. The proprietor of these Pills is therefore happy in offering to the afflicted an invaluable medicine, the success of which has never yet been equalled for the cure of Dyspepsia in its most complicated forms, such as loss of appetite, nausea or sickness at the stomach, and sometimes vomiting, belching up of water which is sometimes tasteless, but most commonly sour, gnawing pain in the stomach, heartburn, or what is called sour stomach, costiveness, paleness of the countenance, languor, lowness of spirits, palpitation of the heart, vertigo or giddiness, and disturbed sleep, &c. Whoever applies these Pills in the above diseases according to the directions, will never be disappointed, as they have never once been known to fail in producing a radical and permanent cure. The use of a single box will convince the most unbelieving of their efficacy. They will most effectually remove all sourness of the stomach, not merely by neutralizing the acid, but by correcting that morbid state of the secretions which give rise to it, and at the same time will restore to the debilitated organs of digestion that tone and vigour which is absolutely necessary to the well being of the animal economy. Offered for sale by
