Saved by a Play-Bill.

The old saying that everything finds its use sooner or later is simply borne out by an episode in Russia's eastern progress, which one may still hear related with infinite glee by some veterans of the Russian army. While Bokhara was still an independent principality under the terrible Nashrullah Kahn, a small party of ment of the Syr-Daria ventured into the hostile territory, in the hope of surveying a portion of it before they could be interrupted. This hope, however, was speedily disappointed by the appearance of an overwhelming force of Bokharlote horsemen, who advanced with the evident intention of attacking them. The Russian leader, seeing his case desperate, boldly assumed the character of a special envoy from the Czar to the Ameer, and in this character made a triumphal entry into the capital, escorted by the very men who had been about to take his life. Admitted to an audience, he coolly presented his own gold watch and silver-handled knife to the savage despot, as the Czar's gift to his "royal brother," and everything was proceeding with the utmost smoothness, when the old Ameer upset everything by suddenly observing that surely the great Czar of the Ooroo (Russians) must have sent a letter some kind along with his gifts. At this malapropos remark the self-styled embassador turned pale as death, and already felt his head sit loosely upon his should ers. A young subaltern beside him, however, with miraculous presence of mind, drew from his pocket an old play-bill of the Alexander theatre at St. Petersburg,
