The fact is, I was about two weeks ago, and shortly thereafter was called upon by his father's friends and urged to confirm his appointment. My reply was: for my information is, his father is able to give his son a liberal education and unless assured appointment, for under my view of the law none but the child of a parent unable to give such instruction ought to be educated at the expense the State. This reply I am assured has been communicated to the father and unless he shall within a reasonable time satisfy me that the State ought to educate his son I shall certainly not confirm the appointment for I am sure the intent of the law is to provide for the poor and not the independent or rich man's children.
