SATURDAY MORNING NOVEMBER 6.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Tuesday's election was a closely contested one in this county. As a result part of the candidates on the Republican ticket and part on the Democratic ticket are returned elected, and the majorities in other instances were very small. The vote for the head of the Democratic ticket, Hon. Thomas A. Smith, and for Judge Russum on the Republican ticket shows a wide range of personal votes, and is doubtless highly gratifying to each of those gentlemen; but they give no indication whatever of the political status of the county. On the other hand, the vote for Clerk of the Court of Appeals, the candidates for which were not known personally to the voters here, shows that the county is really Democratic by the small majority of twenty-eight. The Democrats were confident of a victory for the whole ticket and were woefully disappointed when the news came from Greensborough district that the expected majority of one hundred had dwindled to an actual majority of thirty-nine. The Republican majority of one hundred and three in the Fifth or Federalsburg district was fully one-third more than Democrats anticipated. Speculation as to the cause of the unlooked-for result will not alter it in the least; but if the quicksands could be distinctly staked off there would be no need to go into them another time. Democrats should take heart from the evident trend of public sentiment toward Democracy, and go to work for a victory next year.

The Hon. Wm. Jennings Bryan expresses himself as well pleased with the result of Tuesday's election in the various States, as it relates to the silver question. He says:

"The sentiment in favor of the Chicago platform shows a healthy growth throughout the country. Perhaps our opponents will now admit that silver is not dead. The attempt to secure international bimetallism has proved a failure, and it is more apparent than ever that the people of tee United States must legislate for themselves on the financial question. Free and unlimited coinage at 16 to 1 is nearer the mark than it was a year ago. High tariff on a gold basis has disappointed those Republicans who looked to it for relief."

While the trans-Siberian railway is in process of construction, it is interesting to note that a movement is already assuming shape in this country to establish connection with this gigantic system by means of a trunk line built from Portland, Ore., to Bering sea. Of course, there are many difficulties in the way, but if the enterprise succeeds it will enable tourists to make a complete circuit of the globe in less than thirty days.

The Maryland Legislature is still Republican. And now that another United States Senator is to be elected, we would remind our friends of the opposition that they will have an opportunity to repair the injury done the Eastern Shore by electing a good man to that office from this side of the bay. They can find no better man than Judge George M. Russum, of Caroline.

The Democrats of Maryland did a good day's work on Tuesday in reducing the Republican majority of 32,000 last year to less than 7,000, and it may confidently be predicted that Maryland's solidly Republican delegation in the next Congress will be broken.

The Democracy of Maryland can have nothing but good wishes for Senator Smith, who made so gallant a fight at the head of the Democratic column, and cut down the Republican majority about twenty-five thousand!

The returns show that the Democratic party is at least regaining its strength at a rapid rate, and that in a little while—most likely at the next election—it will be restored to power throughout Maryland.

William T. Malster, the successful Republican nominee for mayor of Baltimore, is a native of Cecil county. When a boy he worked on the Chesapeake & Delaware canal.

The Democracy of the Eastern Shore, taking all the counties together, did well. But for the slump in Caroline the result would have been still more remarkable.

The vote for or against the constitutional amendment was exceedingly light in this county. For the amendment, 101; against the amendment, 491.

Maryland voters will continue the Republican party a while longer yet, although there are 25,000 of that mind less this year than last.

Most people will gladly welcome the respite from political contention and strife incident to the hotly contested canvass.

Another district like the Sixth, and the whole Democratic ticket would have been elected!

Ex- President Cleveland now has a son.

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

President McKinley has issued his first Thanksgiving Day proclamation, setting apart Nov. 25, for national Thanksgiving and prayer. It reads as follows:

"In remembrance of God's goodness to us during the past year, which has been so abundant, 'let us offer unto Him our thanksgiving and pay our vows unto the Most High.' Under His watchful providence industry has prospered, the conditions of labor have been improved, the rewards of husbandmen have been increased and the comforts of our homes multiplied. His mighty hand has preserved peace and protected the nation. Respect for law and order has been strengthened, love of free institutions cherished, and all sections of our beloved country brought into closer bonds of fraternal regard and generous co-operation.

"For these great benefits it is our duty to praise the Lord in a spirit of humility and gratitude, and to offer up to Him our most earnest supplications. That we may acknowledge our obligations as a people to Him who has so graciously granted us the blessings of free government and material prosperity, I, William McKinley, President of the United States, do hereby designate and set apart Thursday, the 25th day of November, for national thanksgiving and prayer, which all of the people are invited to observe with appropriate religious services in their respective places of worship.

"On this day of rejoicing and domestic reunion, let our prayers ascend to the Giver of every good and perfect gift for the continuance of His love and favor to us that our hearts may be filled with charity and good will, and that we may be ever worthy of His beneficent concern.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Washington this 29th day of October, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-second.

"WILLIAM MCKINLEY."

The Public Board of Health.

The semi-annual meeting of the Maryland Public Health Association will be held in Baltimore on November 18th and 19th. The program includes papers upon school sanitation, upon public and private disinfection, upon pollution of soil and water, upon sewerage, on some diseases of domestic animals, especially upon the recent fatal epidemic among horses and hogs. An address will be delivered by Dr. C. Wardell Stiles on Thursday at the opening session upon the relation of slaughter houses to human disease. The Association was organized last February with a membership of about 75 persons. There are now 350 active members, and good results have followed its efforts in many localities. The aims of the Society are thus expressed in their first report recently published. It seeks to promote the sanitary welfare of Maryland by uniting the influence of all citizens professing an interest in that purpose; by sustaining the authority of the public health officers; by co-operation with other charitable and sanitary organizations; by encouraging the study of preventive medicine; by propagating the knowledge of hygiene through popular lectures, demonstrations, and publications. It favors the registration by the State of correct and full returns of births, deaths, and infectious disease, strict supervision and control of food and drink supplies; the maintenance of hospitals for infectious diseases; enforced isolation and disinfection at public cost; the regulationo f funerals and transportation of the dead; conformity to hygienic principles in the construction of dwellings for man and beast; systematic inspection by experts of all schools, tenements, factories, slaughter houses, jails, hospitals, almshouses, and other public buildings, and of steamboats and railway carriages; the restraint and regulation of offensive trades.

Will High Wheat Prices Continue?

Mr. C. Wood Davis, who has made a special study of the relation between the bread-growing acreage of the world and the bread-eating population, in the October Forum, discussing "the impending deficiency of breadstuffs," shows that since 1871 the bread-eating population of the world has increased from 371,000,000 to 510,000,000, or 37 5 per cent, and the acres under grain—wheat, rye, spelt, maslin and buckwheat-have increased from 258,700,000 acres 278,400,000 acres, or but 7.6 per cent. The present ample supplies of grain are accordingly in his view, but temporary, and an era of scarcity and high prices is pending. "Population and requirements," says the writer, "have increased so much more rapidly than wheat-bearing acres that but for an unprecedented succession of seasons over world-wide areas, conducive to exceptionally high over average acre yields, present conditions (of scarcity) respecting supplies and prices would have obtained years since. The farmers' recent hard luck, in short, is an accident, not the permanent rule."

The world at present requires, says Mr. Davis, for its needs at least 50,500,000 acres more than it has in wheat and rye. The acreage deficit of the two principal breadmaking grains is measured by these large figures, while there is an even greater relative deficit in the areas now given to other grains. The world's grain-growing acreage is not being added to in proportion to the increase of "bread-eaters." The yearly addition ought to be 4,000,000 acres, but it is much less.

Gathering Evergreen.

The Wicomico News says: "People in the eastern section of the county are now preparing to ship evergreen. The heaviest shipments will be made Christmas, and good prices are expected. Last season the sale of everygreen was not up to the standard on account of hard times. The business is profitable, and in good times considerable money is made by shippers." In some some parts of Caroline county, notably around Federalsburg, many people have found this a profitable industry.

How to Cure Bilious Colic.

I suffered for weeks with colic and pains in my stomach caused by biliousness and had to take medicine all the while until I used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy which cured me. I have since recommended it to a good many people. Mrs. F. Butler, Fairhaven, Conn. Persons who are subject to bilious colic can ward off the attack by taking this remedy as soon as the first symptoms appear. Sold by W. E. Brown, Denton; H. Duffey, Hillsboro, and R. J. Colston, Ridgely.

CLARE.

Down in the heart of the deep green woods, where the stately oaks and slender pines keep watch, where the streams gurgle merrily on their way to the river, and where the wandering breezes linger to coquette with the sunbeams, grew a bed of violets. Great purple-hearted blossoms they were, with delicate, green stems, and the carpet beneath them was deep green moss. All the long winter, while the bleak winds whistled by, they nestled under their snowy blankets, but when spring came they lifted their dainty, tender faces and their sweet breath lent little wisps of fragrance to the breezes.

* * * * * * *

In the old farm-house, shaded and sheltered by gigantic silver poplars lay a wan-faced girl, who loved the wandering winds, and it happened one evening that the breezes, laden with the fragrance of the woodland violets, stole in at the open window and fanned her white cheeks.

"The west wind is so sweet," she murmured. "It always smells like violets." Then she turned wearily on her hot pillow and sighed:

"The violets will all be gone before I am well, and I will not see them this year."

"Do you want to see the violets so much, Clare?" asked a bright faced boy who stood by the window. "I know where a whole bed is blooming, and I will get them for you tomorrow."

But Clare looked at him reproachfully:

"No, no; you mustn't. It would kill them to bring them from the cool, green home to this hot, dry room, and I could not look at their murdered faces or feel their dead stems, and know their hearts were broken. But I wish I could go to to see them. I want to lie down in the woods once more, to feel the winds blowing over me, and hear the leaves whisper."

The boy at the window said nothing, and the little breezes played awhile with the white curtains and the wide laces on the girl's pillow, and then stole back to the violet-bed in the deep dell.

"You must keep on blooming," they whispered to the little blossoms, "for little Clare, who loves you so much, is very sick and cannot come to see you just yet. But she thinks of you, and a strange boy said they would bring her some day, so you must keep on blooming. We heard the clouds say that the rain drops were coming down, so we must say good-night."

* * * * * * *

Dr. Graham looked thoughtfully down into the eager face of the boy, who watched him so anxiously.

"Do you think it would make her any happier, Harry?" he asked.

"I know it would," was the boy's decided answer.

The doctor looked out of the window again for a moment, then turned suddenly and said:

"Well, Harry, my lad, wrap her up in the warm blankets, and take her to see her violets. But you must wait until the dew is gone, mind you, sir." And before Harry could say one word the doctor was gone.

The boy flew upstairs to tell pale little Clare the good news, and Dr. Graham muttered to himself as he unhitched Dixie:

"It can't hurt her; she is too near the end for that, and I wouldn't deny her for a world. But I know they will condemn me for it, and say I killed her." And the good man's face was a trifle harder as he drove away.

* * * * * * *

So the tender mother wrapped up the frail darling, and Sandy—great, warm-hearted Sandy—carried her down to the green woods and laid her by the violet-bed.

Then he went away and sat down on the banks of the stream. "For you know, Harry," he said to the boy, who had followed him, "she will want to be by herself."

And little Clare laid her wan cheek against the fragrant flowers, and talked to them in her dreamy, old-fashioned way:

"Dear little flowers, I've come back to you. I thought I would never see you any more, for I was so sick. I couldn't let them kill you, dear, you know, and I didn't want to go way to the summer land that mama talks about, 'cause I wanted to see you so much. You remember me, little violets, don't you? You know Clare, for I was never cruel to you, and coaxed the boys to not drive over your bed when they came for wood. And now I am going away pretty soon, dear, for the pain in my back is so great. When you come again I'll be gone, but you'll think of me sometime, won't you, dear, dear little flowers?"

Every word was wafted to the watchers on the bank, and Harry's head was buried in his hands, while great tears rolled down Sandy's freckled face.

"I'll take her back," he whispered, "she has been here long enough."

He started toward her, but stopped involuntarily, for Clare's head rested on her clasped hands, and he thought she was praying. He took off his hat and reverently bowed his head, waiting for some sound. But none came, and at last he raised his head and looked at her, then started forward with a great cry, for Clare had turned her head and a strange look rested on her face.

"Harry!" he shouted. "Harry! Harry!" But the boy was speeding across the fields, and, with fear in his heart, awkward Sandy lifted little Clare and carried her home.

In the cool, shady parlor the child lay in her last sleep. All pain and weariness had vanished, and a smile of infinite peace touched the marble face into rarest beauty. In the white fingers lay a bunch of violets.

"They wouldn't want to live without Clare," Harry had said in answer to his mother's reproachful eyes.

So now in the beautiful hillside cemetery every spring dainty violets trail their purple blossom's over Clare's grave, and often some loving friend will say to a wondering stranger: "She loved them so."

50-in. Cheviot. Rough or smooth and imported or home made.
42-in. all-wool Figured Armures.
45-in. all-wool Granite cloths.
45-in. all-wool Sail cloth.
A slight weave difference of the same family.
44-in. Wool Frieze, striped and figured. Its roughness is its beauty.
48 to 54-in. all-wool Serges.
The bread and butter of a dress goods stock.
45-in. all-wool Henriettas.
40-in. silk-and-wool Henrietta.
44-in. all-wool Merino.
42-in. all-wool Whipcord.
45-in. Mohair Sicilian.
These are some of the all-the-year-round fabrics classed as staples and desirable.
44-in. all-wool French Poplins.
42-in. all-wool French Camel's Hair.
42-in. Satin Soliel. Almost like silk, but made of the finest wool. The makers claim it won't spot and will retain its bright finish until worn out.
Old fabrics in a new dress and foremost in favor for good dressing.
42-in. Lizard Cloth.
One of Priestley's fabrics that wins friends each day.

In Fine Plain Goods Section, East of Main Aisle—

46-in. Whipcord Coverts. Three styles of weave and twenty-one shades.
45-in. Melange Satin Coverts. Seven colorings. Very dressy.
45-in. all-wool Crepe Cheviot. The crepy weave gives it a newness. 15 colorings.
50-in. all-wool Serges. Storm Serges and Dressy Serges. Big and little twills. In almost any color you can ask for.
48-in. all-wool French Poplins. 10 colorings. These are at the low tariff cost.

In Plaid and Colored Cashmere section—

Poplin Plaids. The richest shades over plaided with cluster threads of the brightest silk, 3 styles, 18 colorings.
Drap d'Ete, one of this season's newest fabrics. Not as the old way of making them, but in dress weight. 30 shades.
More than one hundred shades of Velutina. Street or evening shades. Near like Silk Velvet at much less cost.
Twenty-four styles of English Corduroy. Very nobby for Coats, Waists and Bicycle Suits.

In Wool Novelty Section—

We show fifteen styles and ninety-one different color combinations of modest novelties. They are from our best American mills and the best dress goods centers of Europe. High colors woven in neat figures with the more sombre shades, giving richness and newness.

Boys' Reefers THE wooliest looking cloth may be dreadfully deceitful. Our acid pot is a great truth finder. We never buy a piece of clothing till the boiling acid says "pure wool." And many a little swatch of "all wool" advertised elsewhere at lower prices than ours, leaves a big bunch of cotton in the tell-tale boiling pot. We prevent such things happening here, by testing before they come.

These shaggy, fleecy chinchillas and beaver cloths don't hide a thread of cotton. Yet prices are as low as the would-be kinds—

BOYS' REEFERS AT $4.50—

For boys 7 to 16 years old; of handsome chinchilla; some wool lined, velvet collar, bound or double stitched edges. Others Brownie Reefers, with velvet collar; Jack Tar Reefers, of chinchilla, with velvet collar, buttoned to neck, ages 3 to 9 years. Sailor collar Reefers, collar of self goods, buttoned to neck; bound or stitched. For ages 3 to 8 years.

All at same price—4.50 each.

Reefers at $5.50, $6.50, $8.50 up to—

The $12 sorts—of brown or blue Montagnac, with velvet piped edges, lined throughout with silk.
Handsome Military Reefers, for boys of 3 to 10 years, in twilled overcoatings, kerseys, chinchillas and novelty cloths, in green, blue and brown. $8 and $10.

Coats for the Little Ones AMERICAN children are the best dressed tots in the world—the American mother takes a constant pride in the appearance of her little ones; hence the prettiness, the cuteness of the garments prepared to help her in the effort. We don't go to Paris for these; because they make them prettier here at home.

Word hints of the new coats—for ages 2 and 3 years—

At $4—Coats of pretty novelty cloth in red, brown and blue mixtures; plaited collar; collar and sleeves neatly trimmed with mohair braid.
At $4.50—Coats of ladies' cloth, in brown and green; large circular cape; collar, cape and sleeves trimmed with white mohair braid.
At $6.25—Coats of ladies' cloth in cardinal, full pointed collar; collar and sleeves trimmed with several rows of black silk braid.
