FLOWERS THAT NEVER WITHER.

There are flowers that never wither, There are skies that never fade, There are trees that cast forever Cooling bowers of leafy shade.

There are silver wavelets flowing With a lulling sound of rest,

Fans the far lands of the blest. Thitherward our steps are tending,

Often would our footsteps weary, Sink upon the winding way, But that when al! looks most dreary, O'er us beams a cheering ray.

Knoweth how to kindly aid us With the burdens we must bear; Knoweth how to cause the spirit Hopefully to raise its eyes Toward the home it doth inherit

There is a voice that whispers lowly Down within this heart of mine. Where emotions the most holy Ever make their sacred shrine

Of the great Redeemer's love, And the all-bewildering glory Of the better land above. Oh, this life, with all tis sorrows, Hasteth onwand to a close!

In a few more brief to-morrows Will have ended all our woes. Then o'er death the part immortal Shall sublimely rise and soar, O'er the star-resplendent portal. There to dwell forever more.
