THE AXE AT WORK!

THE BIGGEST OPPORTUNITY of a bright and busy season to get the finest and best made clothing at hitherto unheard of prices. We have literally cut the profits out of many lines of goods to clear out our immense stock of elegant suits, and will give every reader the proof of what we say by mentioning a few items.
Read Carefully!
Think Seriously!
Order Promptly!

MEN'S SUITS:
$7 1 2 will buy an elegant suit in Cheviot, Cassimere, or other choice fabric, good enough for parlor, church or travel, and looks (and is) the equal of any $12 to $15 tailored suit. It's an elegant suit, talk as you will, and hasn't a cheap thing about it.
Our $15 Men's Suits are Reduced from $18, $20 and $25, are match $15 for the money anywhere. Imported Cheviots, Cassimeres, Diagonals and other textures; and abounding in novel conveniences. A supurb combination of convenience and style.
Then we grade lower in price towards even $4 for a working suit up to $20 and $25 for a suit for a prince. And it's the same with the Juvenile Department. Thousands of Shirt Waists in percales, flannels, etc., for about one-half the regular price—from 20 cents upwards to $2. Thousands of BOYS' SUITS ranging from $1.50 to even $15, but the gem in this collection is the $5 Knee Pants' Suit, whose like and equal can't be found for less than $10 anywhere else, with all the risk of disappointment thrown in. Hats for boys—you never saw so many styles and beauties and at such prices; those formerly $1.50 now 75 cents; some formerly $1 now 50 cents; and hundreds for 25 cents were 50 cents and $1.

JUGGLERS IN THE EAST.

Tricks that Beholders will not Try to Explain. Bewildering Feats Witnessed by a U. S. Naval Officer—Making a Mungo Bush Grow in a Few Minutes on the Vessel's Deck.

So marvelous are the things which I have seen that I am almost ready to credit anything which I hear of the skill of eastern jugglers. In our trip we first encountered them at Port Said. The ship was lying at anchor there and a tall, intelligent looking Hindoo, dressed in a loose white gown and turban, came on deck. He did so many things, each more wonderful than the last, that I can only remember a few. For instance, he took four eggs, ordinary hen's eggs, which we all examined. He put one in each of his ears, and one in each eye, stood perfectly straight, holding his head perpendicularly. The eggs remained in place as if fastened there. He then took off his turban, a piece of very fine white cloth, eight inches in width and about fifteen feet long. He cut this in two, then lighted the ends and allowed them to burn until they were considerably charred. All this time we were standing very close to him, so that his slightest movement could not escape us. His sleeves were rolled up and there was no way of concealing anything in his gown. Well, he tied the two pieces of his turban together and rolled them up into a knot, twisting it again and again. All at once he gave it a jerk and the long white cloth shot across the deck, white and clean without a break or a burned spot in it. All this on the open deck with the crowd near enough to touch him.

THE JAPANESD JUGGLER.

Everywhere we went we saw jugglers, and their tricks, in which skill was their main element, were very numerous and very astonishing. But here is one by a Japanese juggler which shows more than mere skill:

At Yokohama a juggler came on deck and built a little box by pilling sticks one on top of the other in squares. He held it up so that we could all see through it. Then he put a bottom to it, and immediately thrust his fingers down into it and began to pull cut a long piece of what looked like smilax. He had no possible way of concealing it. He pulled six or seven fathoms of it out—more than he could have wrapped into a small bundle. Afterward he performed what is called the water trick.

He set a small table on the deck, first placing under it a piece of paper so that all the legs rested on the paper. He then piled little boxes and tables one on top of the other, forming a sort of column of which the first table was the base. Each table and box was separated from every other by a piece of paper. Then he stood off from the column and lifted his wand. From one corner of the topmost box spouted a stream of water. When he raised his wand the stream spouted up higher. When he lowered it the stream was less. Then he made water stream from the end of the wand, and walked about the deck with the water flowing from it. His sleeves were rolled up; his hands and arms were bare. At Yokohama, at a theatre, I saw the same thing on a large scale. The juggler then made streams of water flow from the foreheads of his attendants, from the midst of a blazing ball of pitch at the end of his wand, and finally from the flames to two lamps which lighted the stage.

HINDOO PRESTIDIGITATION.

At Singapore, on the deck of the steamer, a Hindoo juggler did the mango trick. He came on board clad in the usual turban and loose white robe, and wearing his legs and feet bare. His tools were a mango nut about the size of the ordinary sea bean, a pot of earth, a short stick about as thick as the little finger, and a cloth about four feet square. He kneeled upon the deck while doing the trick, and we all bent over him. He poured out the earth and heaped into a little mound. He next held up the mango nut, then buried it in the little mound of earth. He poured water on it, waved his cloth over it several times, then pulled the cloth away and a sprout about two inches long stood up fresh and green from the mound. He lifted it out and we all examined it and saw that it was fastened to the nut. He buried the nut again, poured on more water, pressed down the earth with his stick, made the passes with the cloth, and removing it, disclosed a sprout about six inches in length. He repeated this process two or three times and then had a stalk about a foot high. He now pressed the cloth over this, stirred the earth at its base, and again removed the cloth. There stood a mango bush two feet and a half high, with small branches and full grown leaves, looking as if they had just unfolded. He pulled it up and showed us the roots, grown just as the tree had grown. I saw this trick again on shore, and watched even closer, but could not see how it was done.

One day at Singapore I saw a Hindoo boy stretch upon the ground in front of the hotel. The man who was with him spread a white sheet over him so that the outlines of his body were plainly to be seen. He then drew a knife, and, lifting it high in the air, drove it straight through the sheet apparently into the body of the boy. Blood spurted out and the body writhed. The man pushed in the knife hard, then drew it out slowly, covered with blood, which he proceeded to wipe off on a rag. He then lifted up the sheet, and the boy arose with not a stain of blood on his white garments and not a rent in them anywhere.

I did not go far into the interior of India, but those of the Brooklyn's officers who did saw even more wonderful things than these, which I will not repeat second hand. What explanation have I? None, absolutely none.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Teaching Women to Talk.

A talking class—think of that! and all women, too, who gather together to learn how to talk. When New York heard of this new class it talked as one man and even grave Boston smiled. Was there ever such a satire on all that men have been saying about their better halves these thousands of years, when in the year of our Lord 1889 women have to be taught in classes? Miss Curtis, who leads the class, has determined to remove from the American the reproach of talking through her nose, and, while not teaching her to imitate Englishwomen, train her to speak in as rich, sonorous, modulated tones as do Shakespere's countrywomen whom he had in mind when he told how low and sweet and excellent was the voice of the noble Cordelia. It is all done on scientific principles. Nothing goes down nowadays unless it is strictly scientific. In the first place, she takes her class out of corsets and sets them to swinging clubs in curves to develop their chest and abdominal muscles. Then they learn to breathe, to produce the vowel sounds, to modulate their voices out of the even monotony of the ordinary American tone, and to pronounce correctly and distinctly. The wonderful woman of the future is going to lend to the orders given to her cook, as well as the rhyme of the poet, the beauty of her voice, and when the young man of the next generation asks her a certain question her "yes" is going to vibrate with the music of the spheres or her "no" console with its angelic sweetness.—Chicago News.

AN association has been organized in Boston to assist Dr. A. DeBausset to construct a steel air-ship upon the vacuum principle. The ship is expected to lift two hundred passengers and fifty tons of mail or other matter, and also to carry all the machinery and apparatus, with electrical power sufficient to give a speed to the ship of at least 70 miles an hour. A national subscription is being made to secure the necessary fund. The cost is expected to be $250,000. Dr. DeBausset claims that his plans are approved by the most eminent scientists and engineering experts in this country.

THERE'S always a boom in loaded guns,

CHILD AMD MOTHER.

BY EUGENE FIELD.

O Mother-My-Love, if you'll give me your hand
And go where I ask you to wander,
I will lead you away to a beautiful land—
The Dreamland that's waiting out yonder.
We'll walk in a sweet-posie garden out there,
Where moonlight and starlight are streaming,
And the flowers and the birds are filling the air
With the fragrance of music and dreaming.

There'll be no little, tired-out boy to undress,
No questions or cares to perplex you;
There'll be no little bruises or bumps to caress,
No patching of stockings to vex you,
For I'll rock you away on a silver-dew stream
And sing you asleep when you're weary,
And no one shall know of our beautiful dream
Except you and your own little dearie.

And when I am tired I'll nestle my head
In the bosom that's soothed me so often,
And the wide-awake stars shall sing in my stead
A song which our dreaming shall soften,
So, Mother-My-Love, let me take your dear hand
And away through the starlight we'll wander—
Away through the mist of the beautiful land—
The Dreamland's that's waiting out yonder!

SNUBS AND SNUBBING.

One of the most senseless of social mistakes that people of position not wholly assured can possibly make is to confess to being snubbed. In the heat of indignation against the person who has been guilty of snubbing them people are very apt to do the very thing which would be most pleasing to the one upon whom they wish to be avenged. To confess to being snubbed is to acknowledge the power of a given person to confer a rebuff. This in itself is a confession of social inferiority which the one making it would sooner die than make directly, and it is the more foolish because the chances are that it is false.

Manifestly there is no possible position which is at all dignified except that of denying the possibility of being snubbed by anybody. Of course, one cannot always protect himself from rudeness; that comes to all the dwellers in this not wholly satisfactory world. To be snubbed, however, is impossible to one who keeps the position to which he is entitled. He is foolish to accuse himself of having been pushing his way where he had no right by asserting that he has been rebuked by anybody. If he is capable of taking the high ground that he belongs wherever it may please him to go, of course he at one stroke does away with the possibility of being rebuffed by anybody whomsoever.

The confession of a snub is generally accompanied by the more or less emphatic assertion that the person bestowing it has no claim to sit in social judgment upon the individual affronted, and in their anger the complainers cannot see that they are, by their protestations, asserting the very thing that they so bitterly deny. To be logical and angry at the same time, however, is not given to more than one man in ten thousand. When smarting under the consciousness that a social enemy has intended an injury few indeed are the men who can be cool enough to realize what they are doing. They should impress it upon their minds in times of spiritual refreshing and placidity that the practical effect of every protest against a personal snub is to injure themselves. So constituted is human nature, moreover, that they are likely also to increase rather than to diminish the prestige of their enemy. To know that a person is by position able to administer social slight, and that by disposition he or she is capable of exercising that power is with nine people out of ten to be moved to a new respect for so exalted a personage.

All of this is so obvious that it almost seems absurdly superfluous to take the trouble to say it all; but no one can deny the frequency of the sort of error of which we are speaking. Every day somebody is heard complaining of a snub at the hands of some enemy, and in the interests of common sense it seems worth while to remind such grumblers of what is the cost of venting their indignation against such rebuffs.—Boston Courier.

The Dread of Night Air.

An extraordinary fallacy is the dread of night air. What air can we breath at night but night air? The choice is between pure night air from without and foul air from within. Most people prefer the latter—an unaccountable choice. What will they say if it is proved to be true that fully one-half of all the diseases we suffer from are occasioned by people sleeping with their windows shut? An open window most nights in the year can never hurt any one. In great cities night air is often the best and purest to be had in twenty-four hours. One could understand better shutting the windows in town during the day than during the night for the sake of the sick. The absence of smoke, the quiet, all tend to make the night the best time for airing the patient. One of the highest medical authorities on consumption and climate has told me that the air of London is never so good as after 10 o'clock at night. Always air your room, then, from the outside air if possible.—Sanitary World.

A Modern Jury Charge.

A newly elected Justice of the Peace not a thousand miles from Milford, delivered the following charge to the jury the other day: "Gentlemen of the Jury: Charging a Jury is new business to me, as this is my first case. You have heard all the evidence in the case as well as myself; you also have heard what the learned counsel have said. If you believe what the counsel have said, If you believe what the counsel for plaintiff has told you, your verdict will be for the plaintiff; but if, on the other hand, you believe what the defendant's counsel has told you, then you will give a verdict for the defendant. But if you are like me, and don't believe what either of them has said, then I'll be d—d if I know what you will do. Constable, take charge of this jury."

SHE DID NOT QUITE GRASP.—A story is told of a servant girl away out in Denver, who was blissfully ignorant of the customs of any other country besides her own. One time a certain duke of England, who was traveling in this country, visited the servant girl's mistress, who was a lady of wealth and refinement. His grace, on retiring the first night, requested to be called early, as he desired to sniff the ozone of the morning breeze. Next morning the hostess called the servant girl to her and told her to awaken the duke. "Tap on his door," she said, "and say, 'My lord, get up; the sun is rising.'" The servant, who knew nothing of titles, went to his lordship's room, and, after striking the door two or three resounding blows, said: "My God, get up; your son is gittin' up." The duke arose at once.

A GEORGIA gentleman who has tried it vouches for this story: Taking a gallon jug of whiskey he passed a string through its cork, which cork dropped to the bottom of the jug. The twine was then introduced into a water melon vine by slitting the vine, and the vine was permitted to produce only two melons. When the melons were matured they were served at a private barbecue to six gentlemen. The effect was astonishing. The gallon of whiskey got in its work. Not a drop of the liquor remained in the jug when the melons were ripe.

AN OLD VIRGINIA CHURCH.—There is near the courthouse of Madison county, Va., a Lutheran church, built in 1748, the pastor of which is paid his salary from the products of a farm conveyed to and owned by the church for that purpose since its first establishment. Before the war it also owned a number of slaves. Its communion service was presented by the King of Sweden more than a century ago, and its very fine organ was the gift of citizens of London about the same time.

BRAIN REST.

The suspension of self-consciousness is illustrated by the incident related by Dr. Kimster, the expert who has been so long resident in Washington, as physician in charge of the invalid wife and daughter of Senator Sawyer. Dr. Kimster says:

"One of the best authenticated cases of absolute loss of self-consciousness was that of a citizen of Neenah, Wis., a business man, who was lost and not heard from for ten days. He went to a political meeting, heard speeches, and started for home, after having argued with a friend near the hall door concerning the right and wrong of local parties. He did not go home and his family became distracted as the days went by and no tidings came of the missing man. At last a telegram came to his wife, dated Washington City, and stating that he would be home soon. The f
