THE STATE CENSUS.

The State census is about complete. In a few days it will be in the hands of the Governor. The population of Baltimore city is changed from 508,-957 to 514,378; that of the counties from 681,048 to 664,322, and that of the whole State, including the city, from, 1,190,005 to 1,178,900. These figures may be relied upon and will be verified by the official report when sent to Governor Smith. The loss of more than 16,000 in the counties is greater than was anticipated, and means a rearrangement of the representation in the Legislature of several counties. Dorchester county, it is said, will be the only county entitled to an additional representative, the increase over the Federal figures being about 300.

The heaviest losses occur in St. Mary's, Anne Arundel, Charles and Baltimore counties. The discrepancy in Anne Arundel is more than 5,000, in St. Mary's about 1,200, in Baltimore about 1,500 and in Charles about 1,700.

The results in Kent county are very interesting, and when the figures are finally announced, it is said, there may be facts brought to light that will compel a change in the system and method of taking Federal censuses. Both Kent and Prince George's counties are 1,000 short of the Federal figures. Caroline, Queen Anne's, Wicomico, Dorchester and Harford each made slight gains.

The increase in the Baltimore city figures is accounted for by the fact that at the time of the Federal census hundreds of people were away on vacations, and other hundreds were in Anne Arundel county picking berries. The falling off in Charles, St. Mary's and Anne Arundel was anticipated by the developments in the census fraud trials, but the lapse in the Kent county figures was a surprise and may lead to further investigations by the Federal authorities.

The figures for the State follow:

	State.	Federal, 1900.
Allegany	53,325	53,694

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Pension-grabbers are demanding the removal of Pension Commissioner Evans. Evans, who has been quiet during previous attacks upon him, is now fighting back, and emphasizing his claim that the animosity against him has all been stirred up by those who are desirous of a construction of the pension laws, which will add millions to the annual pension payment of the country, and incidentially give fortunes in fees to a ring of pension attorneys. It is no secret in Washington that Mr. McKinley personally believes that he should stand by Evans, but he is being urged to the contrary course by some of the men who have before now coerced him into doing things against his best judgment, and the result is an aggravated attack of his old trouble—wabbling. Gen. Dan. Sickles, who is leading the fight against Evans, has made public a letter from Senator Scott, of West Virginia, in the name of the Republican National Committee, telling him that he could assure the G. A. R. men that Evans would not be kept at the head of the Pension Bureau, and added that Mr. McKinley not only told him the same thing, but confidentially gave him the name of the man who had been selected to succeed Evans. Gen. Sickles added significantly: "If Evans is not removed there will be music." Will Mr. McKinley face that music or will he fire Evans? That is the question of the hour in Washington.

Many Illinois farmers have telephones in their homes. They can talk to their Chicago milk, butter, cream and cheese dealers over the metallic wire every evening if they wish. They can talk prices, market conditions and receive a clear idea of what is expected of them.

President Bosley, of the Baltimore Health Board, says pure water is the thing to drink in hot weather, as in all other kinds of weather, notwithstanding the notion held by some that its use in liberal quantities induces sunstroke.

A forest expert says that unless the growing of timber upon waste land is resorted to there will soon be a wood famine. Despite coal and other fuels, and steel and iron in construction, the consumption of wood steadily increases.

There is a movement on foot in Delaware to elect Governor Hunn to the United States Senate, many of the followers of Addicks agreeing to the proposition.

THE DENTON HIGH SCHOOL BUILDING.

The front elevation of the high school building, now in course of construction at this place, is shown above. It will be a handsome building from any view. It will be of brick, with granite trimmings, two stories and a basement. There will be four class-rooms, an assembly hall, which may be divided into two rooms, cloak room and teachers' room. A part of the basement will be fitted for manual training. The building will be heated by hot water or steam. The dimensions are 66 by 68 feet. The drawings were prepared by Mr. E. E. Insley, and the contractors are Insley & Redden, of Denton. We are indebted to the Baltimore Sun for the cut. The building will be completed by the December 1.

MANUAL TRAINING.

Manual training—which has become so permanent and essential a feature of the great school system of America—was really brought to this country from Germany, the land of pedagogy. Felix Adler, the veteran educator, had long believed that "the evil weed of poverty" could only be eradicated by some agency which should conform with pedagogical laws of education. He lived in hopes of finding some one who could suggest just what this agency should be. In 1879 he was strongly urged by Dr. Goldmark to seek the advice of Gabriel Bamberger, a teacher who had then but recently arrived in New York from Germany and who had formerly numbered among his pupils the wife of Dr. Goldmark. Presenting a letter of introduction from Dr. Goldmark, he sought the interview and quickly learned that the newly-arrived teacher's views concerning the value of kindergarten work coincided with his own. Inasmuch as he had himself already started a kindergarten class, this pleased him exceedingly.

"But," continued the great educator, "what shall become of our children after they have left the kindergarten? If I am dissatisfied with the results of the merely theoretical education in the public schools and cannot see my way clear to advocate a continuance of that method, what is the remedy?" He then explained that it had been his intention to visit Europe and to walk from one pedagogue to another until he should find one who could solve these important questions.

With eagerness Mr. Bamberger agreed to undertake the labor of developing a scheme of study which should unite theory and practice, and what was more, to submit an outline of his plan within 24 hours. Accordingly, on the following day he presented a comprehensive plan—one which Prof. Adler had supposed would require weeks if not months to perfect—and it was immediately accepted by a committee composed of three no less distinguished personages than Prof. Wood, dean of Stevens institution; Dr. Julius Sachse, director of the Collegiate institute in New York, and Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi. In February, 1880, Mr. Bamburger was installed as principal of a new school in New York city, which was named "The Workingman's School and Free Kindergarten." This institution was supported by the united relief works of the Society of Ethical Culture in that city. The scheme which had been so promptly accepted was here put in actual operation.

Taking from the kindergarten the highest class, Prof. Bamberger launched the first school in America which may properly be said to have embraced the principles of manual training as a general educational factor. In this school he was the teacher of the entire curriculum during the initial year. Each year thereafter he added to the school a class from the kinkergarten until, at the end of eight years, he had an eight grade school—the limit agreed upon. It had an excellent corps of teachers and was established upon the firmest of foundations—strengthened by eight years of valuable experience.

As the movement progressed Prof. Bamberger met with the opposition which is usually incident upon any departure from set methods. In 1881 this champion of the manual training school attempted to secure space for an exhibit at the National Teachers' Association held at Saratoga. His plea was received with indifference, but he finally succeeded in having a small corner reserved for some samples of the work of his pupils. At that early period, however, the samples displayed were crude, and, with few exceptions, the visiting teachers "passed by on the other side."

At this point Col. Francis Parker chanced near the lonely exhibit and its solitary advocate. Concluding a long and silent contemplation of it, he exclaimed: "That is true pedagogy!"

On hearing such an exclamation from so notable an educator, the teachers wasted no time in gathering about the exhibit. Though few of them comprehended the real import of the work, it is clear that from this moment dated the more rapid spread of the idea. A school was started in Chicago, but it was confined to the pupils of the higher grades and was not operated for the amelioration of the conditions existing in the laboring districts. Prof. Bamberger believes that to fill its highest mission manual training should be taught in the youngest grades, and that as a philanthropic agency no other plan can be relied upon. Thus it was still left for Prof. Bamberger to enter upon a campaign of vigorous pioneer work in the West.

In 1890 he resigned the principalship of "The Workingman's School" and became the head of the Jewish manual training school in Chicago, which is conducted along lines almost identical with the New York school, the object being to lift the very poor "above their abject surroundings and prepare them for careers of usefulness, honor and self-respect."

Prof. Bamberger's idea is not, as many people have inferred, to teach the masses any fixed trades. This were only to draw the lines of class more closely.

"We seek," said Prof. Bamberger, "the emancipation of the working classes through their work. By what right does an institution make a carpenter of a lad and perhaps rob the world of an Emerson or a Lincoln? We aim to develop the natural tendencies of the child, whether they may lead to art, mechanics or a profession."

The constant effort to put into actual practice the principles and high ideals of education embodied in the teachings of such famous educators as Y. Amos Komensky—who is claimed by both the Bohemians and Moravians—is chiefly responsible for Prof. Bamberger's success in this work, and makes it possible for him to witness the gradual and sturdy growth of a system calculated to raise the standard of American labor.

The Best Remedy for Stomach and Bowel Troubles.

"I have been in the drug business for twenty years and have sold most all of the proprietary medicines of any note. Among the entire list I have never found anything to equal Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy for all stomach and bowel troubles," says O. W. Wakefield, of Columbus, Ga. "This remedy cured two severe cases of cholera morbus in my family and I have recommended and sold hundreds of bottle of it to my customers to their entire satisfaction. It affords a quick and sure cure in a pleasant form." For sale by R. J. Colston, Denton; Hugh Duffey, Hillsboro; T. W. Smith Ridgely.

The Easton Gazette startled its readers a few days ago by saying "the temperature in the open atmosphere, for hours at a time within ten miles of Easton, has been below freezing point," while everybody in the vicinity was sweltering. "In fact," the learned editor said—a few days later—"the temperature was then, and still is, below zero many degrees ten miles overhead."

During last May an infant child of our neighbor was suffering from cholera infantum. The doctors had given up all hopes of recovery. I took a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy to the house, telling them I felt sure it would do good if used according to directions. In two days time the child had fully recovered. The child is now vigorous and healthy. I have recommended this remedy frequently and have never known it to fail.—MRS. CURTIS BAKER, Bookwalter, Ohio. Sold by R. J. Colston, Denton; Hugh Duffey, Hillsboro; T. W. Smith, Ridgely.

Of Interest to Women.

Summer organdies and lawns are to be wonders of filmy stitchery, lace and openwork. A new organdy skirt shows hip close and a Spanish flounce of five thicknesses. The dress and top flounce are lavender, a pale rose flounce is second, a delicate green next and pale yellow and light blue follow. Undersleeves and bodice belt show the same combination of colors. The gown is mounted on pale rose silk, which shows directly through the lavender about hips and bodice. Linen and crash gowns, made in strict tailor fashion, show blouse jackets with deep-shaped bodice belts. They button double-breasted to the shoulder, and are very pretty when left open to the belt over a dainty shirtwaist. Wash stuffs of heavier weaves are made exactly like cloth is and are stiffened in true tailor fashion. Whatever are women to do when wash time comes? Two-piece wash dresses are the rule, so skirt and jacket make the tailor wash dresses, a shirtwaist to be worn under the jacket. Most bodices of wash goods are on the shirtwaist order, none of them is boned, and all are prettily loose in front.
