another this Sabbath morning. He was not disappointed. The old gentleman soon put in his appearance ox-goad in hand.

Isaac retreated to the extreme end of the stable.

"Have I not repeatedly told thee, Isaac, that thee should not neglect thy family, and waste thy time tramping around the country with thy vile herd of low and debasing associates? Thee thy duty in a way thee will not easily forget. buring this short lecture the father was advancing, and the son cogitating as to what course as the wattle descended with double his mind was made up; he would not return the blow, but doubling himself up, he rushed upon the old man, and placing his head in his diathus changing their relative places, and gaining with several well-grown children; and rental authority in those days and the present.

Isaac had the misfortune to lose his wife; n doubt his grief was as genuine and deep as that of most men in like circumstances; but if he believed in any Scripture more fully than another, i was that which declares "it is not good for ma In due time he began to look about for a con said to be the widow of a late sea-captain whose ship had been wrecked several years beand enjoying her sweet smiles and pleasant
