BOYS WEEK MAY 26-30

BORROW ONE—Borrow one, if you haven't one yourself. There's always an exception to every rule, always an excuse for occasional transgressions, and so though borrowing is seldom to be recommended, this time it is perfecty permissible. Therefore, borrow a boy, if you haven't one youreslf, for some night of this week—May 26-30. Make it a Boys' Night at Home, when the grown man can entwine himself in the boys' heart most successfully, and on that night be a "Reg'lar Fellow" with the boy.

If you are fortunate enough to have one or more boys in your home, try to make it a gala time for them. Forget that you are centuries older than they. Forget that you have all the wisdom that Solomon overlooked. Forget that the financial columns of the evening paper are the most interesting to you and remember that the sporting page has the latest political intrigues and the Dry vs. Wet question lashed to the mast for thrills.

There is much to forget when a cut and dried man tries to soar to the level of a live and loving boy. But Boys' Week is the time to try it. Perhaps you looked long for the fountain of youth; and, failing to find it, have accepted the next best thing by allowing the barber to perpetrate all the facial outrages he can think of to restore your baby skin or you may even have decended to the colored collar stage, overlooking completely the surest youth restorer in the world —YOUR OWN BOY. Books and poems have been written and interesting drawings made of Father and Son who were "Pals," but it seldom exists in real life. There is always too much of the mentor-master—must not attitude; to little of the chum-champion-cheese-it, harmony stuff.

Rub it all out during Boys Week and start all over again to make yourself a hero and a pal in his eyes, as well as a father. Lest you go too far afield and flounder in the depths here are a few hints given gratis, to help you make the week a success.

Order what he likes to eat during the week.

At dinner let the boy talk; give him a chance to express some of his ideas, he has many more than you know. During the evening be a source of interesting information and true amusement to him.

Shed your crust and don't be afraid that your heart will die of exposure.

Show him the same sort of affection you lavished on him when he was an adorable baby. That means that giving him a good hug and a kiss doesn't mean that you have turned "soft."

And when he goes to bed you can be sure that his dreams will be of Dad, a new "DAD" who really understands a fellow.

TIME'S UP!!

It is possible "the father of waters"—the Mississippi—has given us a political issue for 1928. Certain it is that the nation has suffered one of its greatest calamities during the last few weeks. It must not occur again.

Whether or not the people should demand a special session of Congress to take immediate action, is a question. We are so fearful such session might run off into political jockeying, maneuverings, filibuster or what not that we hesitate to advocate such session. However:

For twenty years Congress has known this condition must be faced and action taken to eliminate a flood of this kind. It was only a question of when all head waters would be high at the same time. That condition came about this year. You see the results.

President Roosevelt's Conservation Commission engineers urged that Mississippi floods be abolished by storage reservoirs at the head waters and its main tributaries. That was twenty years ago—and since then Congress has evidently had more important business than to protect the thousands in the Mississippi valley against devastation.

Whether it be in special session or the regular session in December, the first thing Congress should consider and adopt is Secretary Hoover's national plan for water conservation and distribution. One project therein is designed to bar any repetition of the Mississippi disaster by building thirteen storage dams in the headquarters of the Cumberland and Tennessee rivers, incidentally developing unknown horsepower of electric energy. When these two rivers are controlled, the Mississippi will be harmless.

We were rich enough to retire one billion dollars of our national debt last year. We are talking obout another three hundred million dolar tax cut next session of Congress. Therefore, we are too rich to keep congressmen in office who will not protect our fellow citizens and home builders, but instead spend their time playing politics for corporate interests.

THE BEGINNING

The commencement season is near —the time when proud parents rejoice at the achievements of their children, the time when boys and girls feel a tinge of sadness, yet a sense of relief, that the hard work of their high school course is over.

Commencement for the average student means entry into the world of practical affairs and to the small majority the beginning of a new experience in college that may make or mar their lives. The event with its stimulating contact of youth and those who are older occupies a place worthy the distinction which it receives.

All of the elements that are a part of education have never been classified. They are too difficult and too numerous to analyze. The process does not end on commencement day as the term implies. It is only the beginning of a larger and fuller life.

We have grown to know better, though, what education means and the great purpose it serves. The mastery of one's mind and a sound and wholesome view of life are the great ends sought. Education has been defined as "The determined and long-continued effort of a serious minded person to train his powers of observation, thinking and reflection through gain in knowledge." Success in the endeavor makes character.

We are apt to judge education by its by-products which, of course, are essential. Efficiency in one's work in life is a manifestation. Certainly efficiency is made more probable with a good education as a groundwork. This hope is high—and a commendable hope it is—at the end of the academic course. Those who have had the commencement experience, however, think less of that outcome than the purpose which it serves in character building and providing a sane perspective, which is increased as the years pass.

INCREASES UP TO VOTERS

Who is to blame for increased taxes?

The war caused an increase in federal taxes which no one could prevent, but the government has been reducing those taxes at a rapid rate. The war was used as an excuse for many rapid increases in city, county and state taxes. But as a matter of fact, war activities are responsible for ony a small part of any increase in local taxation.

The people themselves are largely to blame for tax increases about which they complain. They vote for tax-raising propositions which add to the cost of government. Then when the tax payments, including principal and interest, come due, they kick about the increased tax rate. If it is the desire of the public to constantly enlarge the activity of government into the industrial, regulatory, research and administrative fields of private enterprise, which are entirely outside the function of furnishing sound government for all the people. the taxpayers can only expect a steadily increasing tax burden.

The ballots in every state at every election are loaded with measures which add unnecessary taxes. The voter must show keen discrimination in passing on measures and candidates, if he wishes to hold down his tax bill and official extravagance. This is an individual responsibility and a duty of every citizen.

CHRIST FOR ALL—ALL FOR CHRIST

The Word of God

Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.—Psalm 119: 105.

May 29, 1927

GOD IS LOVE:—Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God. and knoweth God. 1 John 4:7.

PRAYER:—O merciful God, may the love of God be shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit given unto us.

Who did Christ say was his brother and sister, and mother?

Answer, read—Matt. 12:46-50.

Harry S. Russell

Chestertown, just to prove that it is up and coming and to show that it has an interest in the future, begins its first Boys' Week program tomorrow.

Boys' Week finds its genesis in the desire of men who are imbued with the spirit of service and who are seeking for some medium through which they can bring the boy and his problem to the attention of mankind.

When one remembers the number of times he has heard men say, "I just can't understand that boy," then the reason for, and the need of, a Boys' Week is very evident.

Imagine a man saying that he can't understand a boy; a man who only a few years ago was himself a boy. Of course for a woman to say that she couldn't understand a boy would be excusable. They never were boys. But, still, a woman always feels that she knows men, so it is highly probable that she understands boys also.

Being, maybe, a little closer to boyhood itself than a great many of the readers, I may be able to put in a word or so for the boys.

In the first place it is your duty to understand the boy. If you don't then begin. There is but little doubt that of all the animals, higher and lower , placed upon God's earth, the boy is the queerest and at the same time the most interesting. By all means understand your boy.

Boys, if you remember, are born hunters and explorers. They must know the why of everything. And here is the cause for a great part of the misunderstanding.

In many cases when a boy has done something a little off how is he reprimanded? Isn't it usually finished off with something like this; "And if I ever catch you at it again you'll get a lots worse." Not a word of why the thing is wrong.

Wouldn't the explanation of why the thing was not right have served far better?

That is only a single instance. But, enough of preaching, and let's see what Elbert Hubbard has to say about boys:

"I have a profound respect for boys. Grimy, ragged, tousled boys in the street often attract me strangely.

"A boy is a man in the cocoon—you do not know what it is going to become—his life is big with many possibilities.

"He may make or unmake kings, change boundary lines between states, write books that will mold characters, or invent machines that will revoultionize the commerce of the world.

"Every man was a boy once. I trust I shall not be contradicted; is really so.

"Very distinctly and vividly I remember a slim, freckled boy, who was born in the Patch, and used to pick up coal along the railroad tracks in Buffalo. A few months ago I had a motion to make before the Supreme Court. And the boy from the Patch was the judge who wrote the opinion granting my petition.

"Yesterday I rode horseback past a field where a boy was plowing. The lad's hair stuck out through the top of his hat; his form was bony and awkward; one suspender held his trousers in place; his bare legs and arms were brown and sunburned and briar-scratched.

"He swung his horses around just as I passed by, and from under the flapping brim of his hat he cast a quick glance out of the dark, half bashful eyes and modestly returned my salute. His back turned, I took off my hat and sent a God-bless you down the furrow after him. Who knows?—I may go to that boy to borrow money, or to hear him preach, or to beg him to defend me in a lawsuit; or he may stand with pulse unhastened, bare of arm, in white apron, ready to do his duty, while the cone is placed over my face, and Night and Death come creeping into my veins.

"Be patient with the boys—you are dealing with soul stuff. Destiny awaits just around the corner. Be patient with the boys."

"You have saved my life," said the man to the youthful hero who had rescued him from drowning. "As a reward you shall marry my daughter."

The young man glanced at the daughter. Then he threw the man back into the river again.

A Chestertown radio dealer went to a church recently to give a demonstration before the Ladies' Aid and he couldn't get a thing but jazz music and the returns of a prize fight.

Choose the best. Life is short—too short to get everything. Choose you must, and as you make your choice, choose only the best —in friends, in books, in recreation in everything.

"Darling," she said, "will you love me when I grow old and ugly?"
"Dearest," he replied, tenderly, "you may grow older but you will never grow uglier."

A Banker has said: "Thinking ahead is responsible for most of the world's successes. Are you capable of thinking ahead? Are you capable of planning ahead? Of course you are. You pick out your wife months before you marry her. You plan your apartment months before you go to live in it. You choose your boy's school or college years before he is ready to enter. in January for de- You order your car livery in April. But —do you buy your winter's coal in June or December?
