EDITORIAL NOTES.

Nothing in recent publications has attracted such widespread attention as a speech several days ago delivered by Dr. Wm. Osler, in Baltimore. What the doctor said has been quoted by hundreds of papers and criticised or commended by almost every public speaker and press writer. The doctor says he has been misquoted. On Saturday he made this statement:

First, I did not say that men at 60 should be chloroformed; that was the point in the novel to which I referred and on which the plot hinged.

Secondly, Nothing in the criticisms have shaken my conviction that the telling work of the world has been done, and is done, by men under 40 years of age. The exceptions which have been given only illustrate the rule.

Thirdly, It would be for the general good if men at 60 were relieved from active work. We should miss the energies of some young old men, but on the whole it would be of the greatest service to the sexagenarians themselves.

Some Democrats, like a good many of our Republican friends, in some instances, take far too narrow a view of the tariff question. Mr. Bryan does not. He said recently:

"Some of our Democrats have fallen into the dangerous habit of defending a protective tariff when it hits some industry in their locality. They say that while opposed to the principles of protection, they want their people to have the benefit of protection, if any is to be benefited. The trouble with that argument is that it silences opposition to the principle of protection and increases the number of those who are intrenched behind the law."

Hon. Isidor Rayner will be sworn in as a Senator of the United States today, and Maryland's representation in the upper house of Congress again becomes wholly Democratic. This is as it should be, for Maryland is a Democratic State. Messrs. Wellington and McComas attained their high positions by virtue of a very serious quarrel within the Democratic party—a quarrel now happily passed.

Diligent search is being made in Paris for the remains of John Paul Jones, one of the earliest and most renowned of American naval heroes. Like all other real heroes John Paul was very modest and paid very little attention to his own exploits, after they had taken place, in striking contrast to fighters of the present day.

It looks as if we were going to have a sea level canal at Panama after all. Such a canal would immensely increase the cost of the undertaking and prolong the time of its completion, but the engineers have come to the conclusion that it is the only kind of canal worth while.

It is understood that it will be but a comparatively short time before all soldiers are withdrawn from Fort McHenry, from whose ramparts floated the "Star Spangled Banner," immortalized by Francis Scott Key. The post probably will be made a quartermaster's station.

The Municipal League of Baltimore, an organization in which Governor Warfield takes a prominent part, is not likely to make nominations but will endeavor to see to it that good candidates are chosen by the Democrats and Republicans.

The State Board of Education has recommended that the County School Boards furnish to every school copies of the State and national songs printed on cardboard, to be hung up in the school-room.

There is already considerable discussion and speculation as to nominations to be made this year. A number of good men are mentioned in connection with the various important nominations.

Eight of Maryland's counties have made application to the State for aid in road construction, the number of miles to be macadamized being 90¾. Caroline will improve four miles of highway.

Many thousands of Marylanders, including Governor Warfield and staff, are in Washington today to witness the inauguration of President Roosevelt.

A member of the Delaware legislature has introduced a bill authorizing the carrying of concealed weapons, a license for which is to be provided.

Governor Warfield will have charge of the Maryland troops in the inaugural parade. His staff will accompany him. All will be in full uniform.

Today, March 4th, is a legal holiday, Governor Warfield having issued a proclamation making it such on account of the inauguration.

A Dover correspondent says that only by the withdrawal of Addicks may the Delaware Senatorial deadlock be ended.

Chairman Vandiver says he thinks it advisable to keep the Democratic headquarters open all the year around.

It will behoove March to make its exit in a happy mood. Its extrance was anything but lamb-like.

Delaware Republicans will appeal to Roosevelt to arbitrate their senatorial troubles.

PEOPLE SPEAK THRO' PRESIDENT.

Washington, March 3.—Theodore Roosevelt, by grace of God and by will of the people the twenty-sixth President of the United States, is playing a large part just now not only in the affairs of his country, but in shaping the future policy and destiny of the Democratic party.

The President is a natural Democrat—he says so himself—a "Benton Democrat," he calls it. How he managed to get mixed up with the Republican camp and to prosper in it is a mystery that can only be explained by environment—and luck.

The Republican leaders never liked him. They always protested his free, bold ways, and they most deliberately tried to shelve him by making him Vice-President against his will at Philadelphia.

But the Providence which shapes the destinies of nations and of men reserved him for service to the people, and for the revivification of the great Democratic party which carries now and always the best hope of the plain people of America.

The President has climbed into the Democratic band wagon and has actually seized the reins and is doing the driving without any apology to the owners. He is fighting the trust iniquities as if his name was Bryan or Hearst. He is taking the lines of the Democratic platform in remedial legislation, and he is fighting the railroad rate iniquities in almost the exact terms of the Hearst bill of last March. He is demonstrating a regard for popular rights and a fearlessness of corporate displeasure which is as wholesome as it is un-Republican; and he is setting an example of courage in high place which is bracing the backbone of all parties and of all citizens in a republic that has been too much inclined to cower and tremble before the supposed omnipotence of the colossal trusts and syndicates.

I do not fear or hesitate to say this much of the Republican President, because it is true, and because I am sure that his present policies will all work out to the good and glory of the Democratic party, whose platforms he is now vindicating, and the correctness and practicability of whose creeds he is advertising to the amazement of his own ranks and to the delight of ours.

Theodore Roosevelt is making Democrats every day—making them out of men who have been Republicans and making over those who have forgotten to be Democrats, or who have been discouraged in the hope of success.

Do not for a moment imagine that the President can ever carry his old hide bound party of privilege and tariff-fed parasites along with him in this Democratic way. They are folloiwng him rather dumbly now, because they have scarcely gotten their breath in the astonishment which his boldness and his popular courage have produced. They are afraid, too, of this young and now untrammelled political athlete, whose prowess and daring do not particularly invite difference or attack. But there is a muttering all through the ranks of the Republican party, and the murmer will deepen to a storm, in which the spoilsmen's organization will go down to defeat. The prophets of party are already foretelling the speedy future in which Theodore Roosevelt will stand as Grover Cleveland did—at outs with all the leaders of his political army, and as a wedge to split in twain an organization that has already performed its mission and ought to be ready to die.

Nor is the President himself to to reap the fruits of a career which must be unselfish because it is without the expectation of political reward. He has definitely and distinctly put behind him the desire or expectation of another term of office. He has pledged himself to be no more a candidate for Presidential honors. He cannot in honor lead again. His party will not deserve the credit for his popular administration. He himself is out of the race for indorsement. By the next national campaign the Republican party will be split into fiercest factions over the Rooseveltian reign. The faction of corporate greed and special privilege which furnishes the money will be implacable against a Democratic President in a Republican administration. They will stand in a phalanx for the old creeds of protection and favoritism. There is no compromise and no concession to be expected from them. They force the old craft back to its selfish moorings and have faith in another safe voyage to the Presidential haven.

But there are thousands of honest Republicans who since the war inloyal and unquestioning faith have followed the fortunes of the party of Lincoln and Grant. They have kept the faith and never broken ranks because their traditions were set. To these men Roosevelt is a revelation. He is preaching them Democracy from a Republican pulpit. He is showing them that the things which Democrats have pleaded for forty years, and which they have been taught to believe would bring ruin to the country, are good things and righteous things and that they can be done and ought to be done.

Those men can never be Republicans after the old fashion any more. Roosevelt has opened their eyes. They see the light and love it because it is the light of popular liberty.

Now, who will these men follow? They cannot follow the spoilsman and the trust magnate. Not all the fat of syndicates can tempt them any more.

They will not have Roosevelt to follow, for the Reform President will not be there to lead.

What, then, but the Democratic party is left to carry the creeds and policies which these honest men have been taught by a great example to respect?

If only the Democratic party shall be true to itself and to its great traditions; if only the Democratic party will rise to the level of the great opportunity which is presented to it in this tremendous movement; if only the trimmers and cowards and half-Republicans will be quiet or quit, and give a real Democracy free course to be glorified!

No half-hearted platform, no cumbrous platitudes, no straddling protestations and no halting and uncertain candidate can rally the brave true men who have been liberated and inspired by the splendid movements of this eventful year.

The man and the platform must meet in a definite and aggressive campaign. The issues must be clear. The sentences must be short. The platform must be brief enough for every American voter to paste in his hat.

First—Reform the Robber Tariff.

Second—Regulate the Criminal Trusts.

Third—Equalize taxation, if it takes an income tax to do it.

Fourth—Arbitrate the differences of labor and capital.

Fifth—Make reasonable the hours of labor.

Sixth—Put child slavery out of the factories.

Seventh—And put in stripes every man who buys or bullies an American ballot.

Go to the country in seven ringing sentences and the country will respond in a storm of ballots that will bury the Republican party.

Every convert that Roosevelt is making now to the doctrines of popular rights and liberty—and they are thousands—must pin his faith hereafter to the party from whom the President is borrowing his thunder.

There are many Democrats, it is true, whose creeds and personal interests will carry them to the ranks of the old conservative party of property and privilege.

Let them go and the sooner the better. For the great rank of the Democratic army—the plain people of America—reinforced and recruited by the great army whom Roosevelt has liberated from Republican tradition, will make a majority mightier than Roosevelt's own.

And in that majority will be writ the rebuke of the selfish and greedy spoilsman, and the triumph of the great people—the greatest good of the greatest number—for whom the government was builded by the fathers and for whom it must be administered if it hopes or deserves to survive.

It shall be the purpose of this and subsequent letters to point the Democratic people to their splendid opportunity and to the way to meet it.

JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

OLD AGE.

The old fellows who are assailed by Doctor's Osler's proclamation that the dead line of human usefulness begins to show itself at the age of 40, and is quite distinct at the age of 60, need not be perturbed, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. The golden thread of youth is carried to a much later period of life now than it was in former years. A youngster of 70 astride a bicycle is not an uncommon or disturbing incident, though it would have been witnessed with open-eyed wonder and dismay by our forebears. The comforting tables of the expectancy of life indicate that the "old-boys" are increasing in numbers.

Old age for counsel. A contemporary urges that military officers are not retired until the age of 65, and judges are not expected to retire before the age of 70. An Indian chided for being 60 replied that the sixties contain all the wisdom and experience of the twenties, thirties, forties and fifties.

The London Spectator, before Doctor Osler's deliverance appeared, indulged in some cheerful reflections respecting the juvenility of the modern old man. It remarked that senility, so far from hurrying on, seems "to have stepped backward and marched alongside of youth." The writer has discovered a jauntiness and a buoyancy about the middle-aged man of today which would have been regarded as very unseemly in other days. "The gulf which once separated the middle-aged parent from his children seems to have been filled up." All the old boys know this is so and will feel grateful to the writer, who is probably an old boy himself.

And what of the women? Doctor Osler did not have the temerity to discuss old age and womanhood. The Spectator comes gallantly to the defense of the elderly girls:

"Social statisticians tell us that the age at which women are considered most eligible for marriage has been notably advanced of late years, and we know that the lament of many a matchmaking mamma is that the most dreaded rivals of her darling are not to be found so much among the girls of her own age as among women who not many years ago would have been relegated to the ranks of hopless maidenhood."

After all, the philosophy for youth and age is to be always seasonable, and to change with good grace in changing circumstances. "To settle when the time arrives, into a green and smiling age is to be a good artist in life, and deserve well of yourself and your neighbor."

THE INAUGURATION.

Today will be a memorable one in Washington.

Four hundred thousand persons are expected to witness the inauguration of Theodore Roosevelt as President of the United States. Two hundred thousand of these, it is estimated, will be visitors, and Washington is expected to turn out the other 200,000.

This will be the largest crowd which has ever witnessed such an event. The great grandstand across the front of Lafayette Park, facing the reviewing stand of the President, will seat 6,000 persons. The President's stand, will seat 1,000 persons. In the great procession which will follow President Roosevelt from the Capitol to the White House there will be about 35,000 persons. Seven thousand of these will be regular United States troops, marines, midshipmen from Annapolis and cadets from West Point. Fifteen thousand militia will be in line. The other twelve or fourteen thousand will consist of political and civic organizations—rough riders, cowboys, Indians, etc. There will be bands in plenty, a great multitude of them.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE GOSPEL?

Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy will be done in Earth as it is done in Heaven.—JESUS OF NAZARETH.

The great ignorance of what the Bible gospel is is most astounding. Many reformed preachers have given up promulgating any other gospel than the idea of a virtuous and godly life, the theme which is most profitable in many respects, and which they advocate in common with all the decent religions, heathen and otherwise, outside of those who claim the Bible for their spiritual guide. It is evident that from the very beginning, when man was placed on the earth, long before the call of Abraham or the law of Moses, the more ancient fathers inculcated the principle of love to God and man, and this inheritance has passed and spread with more or less clearness to all the nations. Therefore, says Paul: "When the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these having not the law are a law unto themselves, and * * shall be justified * * in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men." So likewise those who have not the gospel may act out the ethics of the gospel and preach to a certain extent the spirit thereof. Therefore, without denouncing any honest man who attempts to lead along in the path of right, it is pretty safe to tell such people that they have not got exactly the right hold. A godly life is not gospel, because "good men die, likewise the fool and the brutish person perisheth." Godliness, no doubt, is profitable, but, after all, virtue, uprightness and integrity are no more than duty, and are what our neighbors expect from us every day. And "when we have done all," says the Saviour, "we may say before God that we are unprofitable servants." So where does the gospel of godliness come in? Virtue is said to be just "its own reward." No glad tidings there.

Again, I asked a worthy citizen, who was a deacon in the Methodist Church for quarter of a century, if he knew what the gospel was. He said it was the story of the death, burial and resurrection of the Lord Jesus. I asked him how that could be when the disciples went preaching it before He died and had no idea even to the last about the crucifixion. He couldn't explain. And so one sect starts out with a certain set of texts, and another sect selects another set, and when they get tangled up they conclude that there is a great mystery about it.

Now, the Bible gospel is not what you can extract from any particular set of texts. It is the whole story, the only thing in the book. The law that came by Moses and the righeousness that came by Christ are not the gospel, though related to it and in a sense component parts of it. Christ Himself, even the chief corner-stone, is not the whole temple. The glad tidings of great joy that shall be to all people is the story of the evolution and revolution of the human family on the earth until their ultimate universal redemption, perfection and sovereignty over this beautiful and God-designed planet—nothing less than "the restitution of all things spoken of by all the prophets since the world began." There is nothing mystical about it like the popular spookology of cloudland. If it has nothing else to commend it it has this—that it comes within the range of any ordinary human comprehension, and one who does not believe it can have the satisfaction, at least, of knowing what it is he doesn't believe. In fact, as I have heard remarked, it really does seem too good news to be true that this dear old world of ours has been so loved of God that He has decided one of these days to wind it up fresh and set it right, clean it out and start it of "all things new." Some of us little honest folks down here already have spent our strength and our lives trying to patch it up. Some even now think they can straighten it out if they can get people to understand such and such political policy. Maybe it is prohibition; maybe single tax; maybe the initiative and referendum—little bits of sticking plaster for the sores of the leper—but beneath them all and beyond all is that bright promise of the Eternal One: The whole earth shall be filled with My glory. The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad and the desert shall rejoice and blossom like the rose. Every man shall dwell under his vine and fig-tree. None shall make them afraid. War shall cease to the ends of the earth, for there shall be peace and good will among men, for the tabernacle of God shall be with men and He shall dwell with them.

Now, who among us wants to go away and leave all this? You or I, dear reader, may not be in it, but that won't prevent it coming. "It's coming yet for a' that." Kings and prophets have waited for it, and poets, sacred and profane, have sung of it. It was the hope of Israel in all ages, and is the Christian hope today, only the accumulation of heathen superstitions has so cumbered it up that it has been lost, like a jewel in a pile of rubbish. But there never has been an age when some one has not perceived it even among the rubbish. Milton and Bunyan could be quoted with Pius IX., President Grant, Queen Victoria, and Tennyson. There is a race instinct that underlies all that replies and corresponds to this gospel—the love of kind, the care of offspring, especially manifest in these later days in the magnificent national organized efforts toward the education of the coming generation. We are ever pressing forward and doing better, getting ready for something. What is it?

Notice to Growers.

We are now ready to contract for our season supply of Corn, Peas and Tomatoes for the year 1905 at the following prices, viz: $8.00 per ton for Sugar Corn. We will furnish seed corn to growers free of charge to them. Two cents per pound for Green Peas when threshed. Seed peas will cost $1.75 per bushel. Tomatoes, $7.00 per ton. All growers of tomatoes will be required to haul them on wagons with springs to prevent bruising or bursting. The farmer will be allowed what pea vines, corn husks and tomato skins he may desire to haul away from factory.
